Text correction also allows for more accurate transcription downloads of the article text. Text correction is not intended to aid in the accurate aesthetic reproduction of an article. General guidelines The transcription in the left-hand column should match the text as it was originally published. Where words are misspelt, or there are typesetting errors, the correct spelling should be added as a comment to the article. On occasion it is not possible to insert the same characters used in the publication, these characters result in a term that is not searchable. The text may be updated to represent a character that can be searched when there are: Upside down letters, these should be transcribed as the correct characters. Minor errors, such as letters being transposed in non-name words, where the word appears with the correct spelling elsewhere in the article, may be corrected. DO NOT correct spelling for words that are names either personal or place , as these may reflect the spelling of the name at the time. Do not delete text that exists in the article. Punctuation and formatting Punctuation and capitalisation should reflect what is published in the article. The following exceptions apply: Small Caps may be transcribed as either all uppercase or as mixed case. Hyphens indicating words split across lines may be left in as per the original , keeping the word split across two lines; or removed with both parts of the word combined onto the end of the first line. In both of these cases the word will be correctly indexed for searching. Do not remove hyphens that occur elsewhere in the text e. George-street keeps the hyphen Text location When text correcting in Trove, the text should be maintained in the lines where they originally appear. This can also be used to indicate where a caption, or other text, appears within an article. Add a comment to the article to indicate where this has occurred. To add or remove lines, wave your cursor over the end of the line you are currently using and then wave down. Tables Due to the nature of the OCR process, tables may appear in the transcription as either each line read left-to-right across the entire table or as columns one after another. Incorrectly identified columns Where columns have been incorrectly identified i. Non-alphanumeric text In some cases non-alphanumeric characters will appear in the transcription where the OCR engine has tried to process non-text e. These characters can either be ignored or removed as they do not impact on searching. Text in incorrect article If the boundaries of an article have been incorrectly identified, and text is included that belongs to another article in Trove it needs to remain in the current article. Add a comment to explain that the text should be separate. For characters that are not included in this list use the Character Map Windows or Character Palette Mac to copy and paste these characters into Trove. Non-English language newspapers and articles Some articles in Trove appear in languages other than English. Text correction of these articles follows the same rules for correction as articles in English with the following exceptions: Chinese language articles may appear in any of the following orientations: Left-to-right horizontally, right-to-left horizontally, right-to-left vertically. Correct these to the modern left-to-right horizontal reading order as this will give the best results for a Trove search Transliteration or Translations should be provided as Comments, not in the article text. If you discover corrections that are clearly not part of the original text feel free to correct them back to the original text. If the corrections contain links, swearing, or occupy significant amounts of the article please report using the Contact us page and these will be rolled back rolling back corrections removes them from the correction history as well as reverting the corrections to an earlier stage. Text correction counts Text correction counts are based on the amount of lines corrected and are updated immediately in your profile. Changes may take a little longer to appear in Trove searches. Corrections are added to a total once they are indexed in Trove. The Hall of fame leader board lists the top correctors of all time, from Australian Newspapers Beta to the present day. You can also filter the leader board by month or by publication type.
