Chapter 1 : What you need to know about baby's first words

Few words are as eagerly anticipated as your baby's first. After the initial excitement and cooing over his genius subsides, many of us wonder whether that first word was a common one. Wonder no.

Find out when babies start talking and more. By 8 months, your baby will probably start stringing together "ma-ma" and "da-da" sounds without necessarily knowing what they mean. Looking for more fun firsts? Visit our Milestones Center! When Do Babies Start Talking? Babies start talking – that is, attempt to express himself in words with meaning – anywhere between 9 and 14 months. How to Get Your Baby Talking Language acquisition starts with receptive language, or understanding individual words and their meanings. Starting at birth, babies are listening closely to the words and sounds all around them and beginning to sort out their meanings. By about 6 months, your baby will most likely understand individual words, such as his name, and the names of other people and familiar objects. All of which brings him closer, day by day, to saying his first word. The best way to help your baby say his first words is to talk to him – a lot! Your baby will be eager to pick up on your verbal cues. Speak the names of objects and people. Read to your baby, pointing out objects and their names in the pictures he sees. Ask questions, hold one-sided conversations – and listen if he answers. More ways to encourage a baby to talk: Speak slowly and clearly, and focus on single words. Use names rather than pronouns. Your baby will learn valuable language skills from the simple rhythms and silly repetitions of nursery rhymes and songs. Repetition is your friend. Saying things not once but twice, singing the same songs over and over, pointing out the same flower pot every time you pass it on the street Your child may start to use sound-words like "mi" for "milk" or "dat" for "that" as in, "I want that! Or your child might not start to say words or word-sounds until as late as 18 months. Every child develops at his own pace.
