Life and career

Everybody in my family sings, everyone plays instruments It was something silly. I lost that job pretty quick. Nevertheless, Mars used his childhood nickname Bruno and changed his surname to Mars, in an effort to "avoid being stereotyped". Bhasker explained that Lindsey would "mentor us, and kind of give us lectures as to what a hit pop song is, because you can have talent and music ability, but understanding what makes a hit pop song is a whole other discipline. On the verge of giving up, they received a call from Brandon Creed, who was looking for songs for a reunited Menudo. He liked their song "Lost", which was written for Mars. The sale of this song allowed them to continue working, [27] and Mars and Lawrence decided that they would write and produce songs together for other artists. Billboard Hot and in the UK single charts. While talking to a police officer, Mars reportedly declared that what he did was "foolish" and that "he has never used drugs before. I was in fmg Vegas I was really drunk. So a lot of that is a big blur, and I try every day to forget and keep pushing. Later, on October 18, , the singer began a co-headline European tour with Travis McCoy that lasted until early November. He announced the album title Unorthodox Jukebox along with the ten songs which would make the final cut, and the title of the first single, " Locked out of Heaven ", released on October 1, The viewership was higher than the game itself. He wrote on his Facebook page: The artist had not come up with a date for the release, stating: He wanted to improve his songwriting, shows, music videos and make a better album than the previous two. They are only surpassed by Gloria Estefan , with three appearances. At that time seven songs were already recorded. This was his first television appearance in four years, coinciding with the release of the album. After this, Mars took his business affairs under his own management company, Gorilla Management, which is operated by Aaron Elharar. As a child, Mars spent time impersonating Elvis Presley. This playact had a major impact on his musical evolution; he later reflected: You can say the same thing for Prince or The Police. Ideas occur suddenly to him; and occasionally, he is able to materialize them into lyrics. It can take him one year to come up with something. If you know my story, you know I love all different genres of music. That music brings people together. The song comes first. She described his voice as a "clear, unapologetic tenor" being a "blessing" nowadays. Louis Post-Dispatch called Mars a "consummate performer. Mars walks the old-school walk and talks the sexy talk, but he also nails the hits, leads a super-energetic nine-piece soul band, and rips a mean drum solo". They also serve as dancers and background singers.

Pin Men are generally pretty bad at making friends—at least with other guys. Especially as we get older, men often have fewer close male friendships. Worst of all, this lack of close relationships could be very, very bad for us. Prolonged loneliness can have serious consequences for cognition, emotion, behavior, and health—and may even speed up physiological aging. Part of it seems to be the way we grow up: Ironically, as we start our journey to becoming men, some of us become preoccupied by worries about not fully reaching some manly ideal. During this time, we may also start to see other men as competition—probably some primal vestige of our more Darwinistic caveman days, when the only thing that mattered was Am I strong enough to fight you? Download this Free Cheat Sheet with 11 ways to make more guy friends. This is when we start to zero in on our interests and begin finding paths for our adult lives. The activities we choose at this time often become the centers of our social spheres. Keeping friends as you get older is the difficult part. Life gets in the way. Not to mention if you spend more time with your buddy than your wife or girlfriend thinks is appropriate then they think that you are neglecting them. So enjoy the quality not so much the quantity. I am good at making acquaintances with NEW guys that I meet. I can hang out, laugh, have inside jokes, etc. But many other men feel a loss of connection as they get older—and the sense that having more close male friendships would be valuable. Yet, it can feel like an uphill battle. Some of the common themes that emerge are: Growing up, most men are pretty motivated to learn how to approach and talk to women. For this reason, many men find that in their adult years, they are still far more comfortable talking to women—even in a platonic situation. I can theoretically go up to a girl at a bar or coffee shop and start talking to her. Maybe ask her out and start a relationship. For some reason, in our society, walking up to a guy and doing something similar with a friendship being the only desired outcome seems strange and bizarre. Yes, there might be some awkwardness at first. Or, the conversation ends after a while, and you both go your separate ways—still no real consequences. Yet still it holds us back. We all get nervous, we all get stage fright. So too with making guy friends. Here are some tips that can help you increase your chances of making guy friends as an adult: So why not embrace it? The irony of work connections is that you probably spend as much time if not more with them as your family. The only potential downside is if you feel your friendship might interfere with work. I had an experience where a close college friend ended up working with me—actually reporting to me—shortly after I moved to San Francisco. At first I was worried how working together would affect our friendship. So, think about your interests: Taking friends out of the equation, what are you already interested in? This makes the events a non-threatening way to simply socialize. Join an Organization Joining an organization can be a great way to meet new guys who could become potential friends. Best case, you expand your mind and change your opinion. Worst case, you reinforce your previous beliefs and civilly agree to disagree. Join a Professional Networking Group You can certainly explore organizations specific to your profession. There are also other cross-industry organizations solely for the purpose of networking. The group aims to simply connect people without any specific agenda. It really can be an opportunity to connect with people on a fundamental personal level. Those are the conversations that can establish a business relationship, but also potentially lead to friendships with other guys. But you can also look at sites like Eventbrite. The truth is, most of the people attending are there to meet other people—or at least not afraid of making new connections. You may not make ANY close friends. But, again, much like in dating, simply getting out there helps increase your chances of making an acquaintance that may eventually turn into a true friendship. A cafe, your regular bus or train route, a bar you frequent, even your gym? Often, breaking the ice once can lay the groundwork for a real relationship to develop over time. It may not always be possible for connections that live on the other side of the country or world, but there may be opportunities to meet up with contacts that live within a reasonable distance. When writer Bob Gordon was looking to reinvigorate his social life and meet guy friends, he started going to Reddit Meetups. He had an interest in raw denim, and ended up finding a meetup that he drove to, where he met a bunch of new, like-minded guys. Not all of them became lasting friends, but having the in-person interaction definitely helped create a new bond with some of his connections. Even though the idea of getting set up may seem awkward, it can often take the pressure off meeting new people. His goal was more specific than just meeting new friends; he wanted to surround himself with rich and influential people he was familiar with that adage that you are the average of the 5 people you hang out with most. I want my booze now! He would repeat that trick each time he grabbed a drink. And that simple exchange would often turn into multiple connections throughout the night. If you have 12, friends on Facebook but no one to give you a hug when your girlfriend dumps you, then you need to reevaluate your social life. Record labels have the same challenge. We have to have a similar mindset with making guy friends. Can we predict how often those acquaintances will turn into friendships? That by simply having a conversation, they are making themselves vulnerable and opening themselves up to be judged. I know how to comport myself with women because I practiced hard in high school and in college. But when we talk to men, we often revert to a binary view of the interaction: Will he accept me or not? The key is to get comfortable being in that middle-zone: Because that is the potential runway to friendship. And this is far easier and less awkward now that our understanding of networks is changing. With employees staying at jobs for shorter periods and as technology has enabled more mobility and competition in the workforce, the importance of having a professional network is even clearer. Can I buy you some coffee sometime? But usually the best thing to do is just focus on helping the other person somehow. And often this means simply introducing to someone else you know who might be useful to them. As Adam Grant shows us in Give and Take, this kind of selflessness can actually drive our success in big ways. You can think of it as making a goodwill deposit that may yield a return later. They may return the favor and help you professionally or personally or maybe not. And that goodwill may blossom into a deeper connection later on. Otherwise, grabbing a drink or going to a show really any kind of activity that you both might enjoy can work. Ultimately, the best way to get comfortable seeking out new connections is to practice: To build the habit of connecting with people. Without any specific agenda. Say hello to people men and women. Take an interest in their lives. You may become friends or you may never see each other again. Will everyone want to talk to you? Plus, there are fundamental techniques you can use to make yourself more successful and connecting with people. Become genuinely interested in other people. Be a good listener. Encourage others to talk about themselves. Make the other person feel important and do it sincerely. Please leave a comment below and let me know what you thought. Any tips you want to share?
