Supporters of Proposition 10, which would repeal the Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act, a law cracking down on rent control, said the measure is vitally needed in a state crippled by a housing crisis, where skyrocketing rents are driving the middle class and working poor out of the state or onto the street. Proposition 10 allows cities and counties to put into effect new rent control measures or expand existing ones. Opponents of Proposition 10 say that if the measure passes, widespread rent control regulations will cause property values to crater and rents to lock in for years at the current levels. Swanson, who has lived in his apartment for a decade, said the yearly rent increase typically was 3 percent to 5 percent. The landlord promised to reconsider the rent hike if Proposition 10 failed, and included a packet of No on 10 information with the rent hike letter. Your property is not rent controlled, but may become rent controlled as early as Nov. Therefore, in preparation for the passage of this ballot initiative we must pass along a rent increase today. Rampart describes itself as a midsized management company that represents hundreds of apartment owners and real-estate investors. So as a result, I will unfortunately raise rents again. A few spoke on the record, but most spoke only on the condition of anonymity because they feared retaliation by their landlord. A No on 10 spokesman said voter intimidation is not happening and that there is no coordinated campaign to have landlords pressure their tenants. The latest campaign disclosure reports through Oct. During the time period of July 25 to Sept. Maviglio rejected the notion that there was a concerted effort by the campaign and the apartment managers and landlords associations to threaten tenants. Clearly it is an attempt by [apartment] managers to get these tenants to vote against Prop. Updates donations to Yes on 10 and No on 10 campaigns to reflect latest state disclosure reports, 25thth grafs. Jasmine Zamora The only act of foul play in the Prop 10 debate is by a rent control activist, caught on camera, and caught by police, trying to sabotage the democratic process: Mountain View police announced this afternoon that they have cited Job Lopez, 73, for petty theft and vandalism in connection with the spray-painting of the John Inks for City Council sign. Job Lopez is identified as a tenant activist. Prop 10 supporters appears to think petty theft and vandalism is justified in their campaign. If it fails, landlords rolling back those increases are not prevented for increasing rents in the future if they find it justified or necessary, something that they could be prevented from doing if Prop 10 passes. That seems to be the way to go in my opinion. Housing is a need, and if you want any economy to succeed you need people to have homes, jobs and an income to spend on more products than just one. Marusik Vote Yes on Prop How can imposing rent control on newly constructed apartment buildings and single family homes help providing more affordable housing? The rhetoric of Prop 10 does not fly. I refuse to listen to any paid shill. Support for Capitol Weekly is Provided by: Advertisement Support for Capitol Weekly is Provided by:

Based in Nevada's state capital of Carson City, Capital Crossfire is an issues and discussion program that encourages open discourse without contention and in recognition of the facts.

Format[edit] The show was hosted by two pundits, one of whom was presented as being "on the left " and one "on the right ," to provide two sides of the political spectrum. The show usually featured two additional "left and right" guests on each topic of discussion. On some occasions only one guest was featured. Occasionally, when the co-hosts agreed on the featured topic, two guests of the opposing view would appear. More rarely, when hosts disagreed with the prevailing view of their side, they would debate someone from their own camp who agreed with it. The program, on which the pair debated political issues, was highly praised, but its ratings were low and, in , it was cancelled. Turner backed down and agreed to give them a half hour at In , Buchanan left the show for a job as communications director in the Reagan White House. In , Buchanan returned to the show, replacing Novak. Later years[edit] In late , Buchanan left the program to pursue the Republican Party nomination for the presidency, and was replaced by John Sununu in the conservative seat. Buchanan returned in and alternated with Sununu. In , Buchanan again left the show to pursue an unsuccessful bid for the Republican nomination for president. The initial hosts were Bob Beckel on the left and Tony Snow on the right. Kinsley left the show at the end of and in early , CNN selected two hosts to alternate on the left: Geraldine Ferraro and Bill Press. In , Buchanan again returned to the program, replacing Novak on the right. At the end of the year Ferraro left the program and Press became the full-time representative of the left. A month later Sununu left the show, and Novak returned alternating with Buchanan. In February , Crossfire Sunday was cancelled. Crossfire studio at the George Washington University in In , Buchanan left the show for the last time and Mary Matalin was his replacement, alternating with Novak on the right. In , Matalin left the program to join the White House staff and she was replaced by Tucker Carlson. In , the length of the program was increased to an hour. Novak and Carlson retained their slots as alternating hosts on the right. Paul Begala and James Carville replaced Press on the left. The new style did not rate well, and in April , Crossfire was reduced back to just half an hour and moved from prime-time to an afternoon slot. He used his appearance on the show to raise criticisms of the format of Crossfire and the style of arguments presented on the show. He said the program failed its responsibility to the public discourse and indulged in partisan hackery, reducing news coverage of important issues to a series of talking points from both extremes of the political spectrum: Here is what I wanted to tell you guys: You have a responsibility to the public discourse, and you fail miserably. Begala defended the show on the basis that it was intended as a forum for debate, to which Stewart responded that calling Crossfire a debate show was "like saying pro wrestling is a show about athletic competition. At a time when the average number of viewers of the show was about , the episode drew , viewers. Revival[edit] A revival of Crossfire was announced on June 26, , for a premiere in late , with panelists Newt Gingrich , S. Cupp , Stephanie Cutter , and Van Jones. On October 15, , the show was officially cancelled for the second time.
