Conjunctions join sentences, phrases, or clauses together. Common conjunctions include: and, or, but, nor, yet, so. Select the common core icon below each worksheet to see connections to the Common Core Standards.

Coordinating conjunctions join independent clauses together as well as words and phrases, while subordinating conjunctions can join both dependent and independent clauses as well as words and phrases. Acquisition and frequency of conjunctions has been studied extensively. Among the findings are that the word and often initially takes the role of other conjunctions Bloom et al. Conjunctions like because then develop to express not only a relationship between sentence elements, but additionally a temporal sequence. As with other language modalities, conjunctions exist because they assist. We use them to achieve a goal. Just try giving a reason for something without using the word because, or try describing the time relationship between two completed events without using conjunctions such as before, after, or then. It can be done, but much less effectively. Generally, developmental order of conjunctions is determined by the complexity of the relationship the conjunction serves. Guided Discussion Ideas Say this: Sometimes they can go at the beginning of a sentence, but they usually work much better in the middle of a sentence. They let you talk about a lot of stuff all at one time. Explain that conjunctions do things for you. Some tell you that many things are happening. Some tell you when things happen. Like, I want salt and pepper. Like, I want salt or pepper. If I want to give a reason for something I use because or so. To sum it up, if you can use conjunctions correctly, it really helps people understand you better, and understanding conjunctions really helps you understand others better. Change one element at a time. For example, Point to the apple and the pear. Point to the apple or the pear. Point to the apple if I point to the pear. Point to the apple unless I point to the pear. Point to the apple after I point to the pear. Point to the apple before I point to the pear. Point to the apple, but not the pear. Point to the apple while you point to the pear.
