There are many historical buildings, national landmarks, and local businesses that deserve attention. Be sure to include some of our must-see sights to make your visit to Grand Canyon a more memorable one. The district comprises the historic center of Grand Canyon Village and includes numerous park structures, many of which are National Historic Landmarks. The Village, planned by the National Park Service, is the largest example of Park Service town planning in the national park system. The hotel opened in 1906, and was one of the fanciest hotels west of the Mississippi. The Fred Harvey Company was chosen to manage the new hotel, due to an existing relationship with the Santa Fe. The hotel features 78 guest rooms, a gift shop, newsstand, dining room, and lounge. The hotel is open to the public and is a great place to relax and step back into life in the past. The hotel is open year-round. Colter and opened in 1906, at the same time as El Tovar. Colter was one of the first American architects to appreciate the natural beauty of Native American design. A visit to Hopi House combines retail shopping with museum-quality artifact viewing. Here you will find a large selection of native arts and crafts available for purchase, such as hand-crafted kachinas, Native American jewelry, hand-woven Navajo rugs and authentic Native American pottery. The second-floor gallery offers a variety of museum-quality items. Hopi House is located next to the El Tovar on the canyon rim. It is open year-round. Walk in and spend time in the lobby to examine the craggy fireplace and notice the American Indian iconography adorning the doors and panels. This room once served as a lounge for long-ago visitors; today it houses the Fred Harvey Museum. Bright Angel Lodge became the hub of activity as soon as it opened and remains the focal point of the South Rim today. The lodge also features a gift shop, two restaurants, a lounge, coffee house, and a seasonal ice cream fountain. Colter as a gift shop and lookout point for the Fred Harvey Company. It is perched on the very edge of the rim, providing spectacular views. It blends exceptionally well with its natural setting. There are two small outdoor overlooks that are open in good weather. Lookout Studio sells photography and books related to the Grand Canyon, rock and fossil specimens, traditional souvenirs, books, and photographic prints. It is located a short walk west of historic Bright Angel Lodge. Kolb Studio Once the home of the Kolb brothers, who were early photographers at Grand Canyon, Kolb Studio features changing art exhibits displayed in the auditorium throughout the year. This facility is operated by the Grand Canyon Conservancy. The bookstore and auditorium are open to the public. The main structure contains a snack bar and gift shop featuring traditional gifts, park souvenirs, and Native American handicrafts. Built in 1906, this seventy-foot tower is the highest point on the South Rim and offers stunning degree views of the Painted Desert, the San Francisco Peaks, the Vermilion Cliffs, and beyond. You can climb the stairs all the way to enjoy these spectacular views. The walls of the tower feature murals by Hopi artist Frank Kabotie. Individually listed on the NRHP. The Power House is notable for its application of rustic design principles to an industrial structure and for its creative use of scale. It is an individually listed National Historic Landmark. The depot, designed by Francis W. Both the subdivision and the houses themselves are larger than the Park Service equivalent, with garages to the rear of the houses on alleys. Colter Hall, designed by Mary E. Colter and located behind El Tovar, was originally a dormitory for the Harvey Girls. It serves as employee housing today. Arriving from England in 1871 at the age of 15, Frederick Henry Harvey worked as a dishwasher before creating the very first chain of hotels in the United States. By 1880, the Santa Fe Railway was struggling through the difficult Colorado and New Mexico terrain to compete with the more mature Union Pacific and Northern Pacific routes, yet emerged from the depression of 1893 as a major line. The travelers of that era moved through Chicago on a slow journey westward on hard board seats in overcrowded crude coaches. At a time when most railroad food was poor and even inedible, Fred Harvey provided appetizing meals in comfortable dining quarters. He opened his first railroad restaurant in Topeka, Kansas in 1881. Perhaps more than any single
