

Chapter 1 : Critique of Legal Order: Crime Control in Capitalist Society by Richard Quinney

In Richard Quinney. Taking a neo-Marxist approach in Critique of Legal Order (), he introduced a theory of legal order intended to demystify the false consciousness that he maintained was created by official reality.

Despite being a bit predictable, the episode was enjoyable, with crisp dialog and location shots that provided some spice for a story that was light on action. Everyone had screen time and played a part in the investigation, striking the right balance between lead characters. Stone, on the other hand, rubbed me the wrong way. But Stone is making rookie mistakes. It was obvious when he promised the current victim that the other three victims would not back out of their support that something would put that promise in jeopardy. They should close the loop on that story line and move on. We need to like and respect Peter Stone as a prosecutor. We need to see his own passion as a prosecutor. I was amused when Fin sipped the expensive wine and said it tastes like warm apple juice. And while I am on the subject of food tastes, I have a suggestion for Benson: Here is the recap: A chef, Andrew Liebowitz, prepares a fancy meal and gets irate when he calls for service and no one picks it up. He continues to get upset and decides to deliver a meal to the table himself when the manager tells him about two special diners who are waiting. He asks if they can hang out a bit after dinner and when they agree. Andrew says the waitress, Kayla will show them to their private room. She wants him to eat new things and he wants pizza. She suggests he try them and he spits them out, pushing his plate away and demanding pizza. Afterwards, Kayla drinks some tequila while she is working at the bar section, the bartender saying there are big tips at the bar and the bedroom. She says no more tequila or she may end up taking Marco home. Brian and Niraj are there and when she delivers their drinks, they ask for her to sit down. When she says there is no chair Niraj says Brian would be fine if she sat on his face. Brian asks her to run his card and when she reaches for it, he pulls her onto his lap. She tells them this is not that kind of club and she walks off. The manager adds it is the story of her life. Later, two police officers hear a call for help and a man telling a woman to get out of his car. They intervene and find the woman in the back seat, her blouse opened. Sometime later, Fin and Carisi arrive on the scene. The two officers explain her name is Kayla Morgan; they walked by just as the Uber driver was climbing on top of her in the back seat. The driver, Michael Boykin, claims he tried to end the ride, saying Kayla refused to exit the vehicle. They add that Michael says she seemed wasted and he tried to help her out of the car but she started wailing on him. She did not say he tried to rape her, but her shirt was ripped like someone tore it open. Fin suggests they take them both back to SVU. Meanwhile, Fin and Carisi speak with Michael who denies doing anything, saying he is the victim. He did not tear her blouse and says he will give them his DNA or take a lie detector. He was on the phone with his wife. He thought something was off with Kayla, she was staring into space like a zombie and he tried to shake her out of it. She went off on him like a lunatic. Benson comments that she knows this is difficult but they are almost done, if she can give her one more minute. Rollins asks if she recalls how her shirt got ripped. Kayla gets upset and insists she is not a victim. Benson states quietly that she thinks maybe she was. Benson does not think so. She storms out of the room. They explain she got picked up at Far Rockaway by Andrew, a high-end seafood joint. Carisi said he took a date there once, it set him back a couple hundred bucks. Rollins asks if it was worth it, and he says every cent. Benson tells them to cut Boykin loose and check it out. At Far Rockaway Restaurant on Saturday, October 27, they speak with the female manager who explains Kayla works there. The kitchen closes at one. One of the servers, Marco, has a thing for her. They speak with Marco who suspects she was raped as he knows what SVU means. They then speak with the bartender. He admits he had some drinks with her and then mentioned the two TV execs who got handsy with her. They left at 2: The last he saw her was about 3 when she went to the wine cellar, Andrew needed her for something. Fin and Carisi speak with Andrew who said Kayla was helping him with shipment. He offers them some wine but Carisi says they are on duty. Andrew says a hint of Granny Smith, he will put that on his tasting notes. Andrew talks about getting into the business but they explain Kayla was assaulted last night and he was the last one to be with her. Things got hot and had consensual sex, she was begging for it. Carisi asks about ripping her shirt and he says he buys the damn shirts. It was not the first time they screwed and thinks a rape claim is a shakedown.

Speaking with Fin, Carisi, and Rollins, she worries she will lose her six-figure job. She explains her relationship with Andrew, saying it is not all rose petals and fireworks but she is handling it. They had sex once before but that was a mistake. When they ask about consent, she said it was not a black and white thing. She appreciates what they are doing but tells them to stay out of her life before they ruin it. Three separate employees charged him with sexual assault. Stone suggests they talk with them to see if they can stir the pot. Elsewhere, Fin speaks with another. Rollins speaks with the third at SVU. They hear similar stories about how Andrew assaulted them. In some cases he took their panties. All three girls reported but no arrests were made and no rape kits had been done. Chris Hodges was the ADA on all three but he declined to prosecute each time. Fin calls him a boy wonder prosecutor, big in the "me too" movement. Fin adds the rumor is he is running for Kings County DA. Stone explains their investigation of Andrew and Chris explains all the problems they had with the cases for the three women: They would never win. He hopes Stone fares better. Stone says Hodges thinks the cases were losers and Benson counters there are no perfect witnesses. Benson comments he made a name for himself busting a Russian sex trafficking ring and they tried to kill him but thinks this case is a no-brainer. Stone tells Benson to have any change of a trial, Kayla has to testify. At another time, Stone stops Kayla as she walks down the street and he explains who he is. He continues to try to convince her, mentioning that Andrew already has her panties in his trophy case. She is surprised he knows this, and he says it is all about power. Andrew will keep doing this until somebody stands up and stops it. He continues to press her, mentioning his sister being murdered by people he was prosecuting. The only way he can do that is if he believes he can stop it from happening to somebody else. Kayla comments she used to love her job Far Rockaway and loves her friends and makes decent money. Stone says Andrew took that away from her and nobody should have to pay that price. She is supposed to get paid tomorrow. Stone says they can arrest him tonight if she is on board. He promises the other women will not back out. She agrees, but asks they send the cops tomorrow, during her shift, she wants to see this go down. The next day, Fin and Carisi enter the restaurant and arrest Andrew and take him out in front of all the diners and workers. He calls Kayla and ungrateful bitch and adds she is fired. In court, Andrew is arraigned and pleads not guilty. Stone, calling Andrew a serial predator, and the defense attorney argue bail.

She also had no problem killing for a man. This episode had a balanced blend of detective work and personal issues; sorry, no Philip Winchester. Whatever legal work was needed from the DAs office happened outside of our view, but that did not detract from the story. She also admits to Benson that Dr. Benson is working hard to get herself into shape; she is now exercising with a trainer. I could have done without the mental image of her doing squats while cooking dinner, however wink. Her next problem will be Noah. The 10 PM air time has allowed the show to provide more adult story lines with slightly more adult language and more gruesome crimes. Once they get the phone, does that give them full access to any apps on the phone and the data that is stored in the cloud from those apps? Did I miss something? I enjoy episodes that are visually interesting, and spending less time confined in the 4 walls of the interrogation room or in the courtroom is a plus for me. This episode hit all the right buttons for me. Update October 23, - a deleted scene from NBC has been added after the recap. Here is the recap: She jokingly suggests the trainer move in with her and make her do squats while she cooks Noah dinner. She says she will text time. Claudia is the hostess and she explains how the group gave her power. Lilah asks a woman "we later find she is named Vicki - to share her story, and she says how it helped her make her stronger. At home, Vicki tells someone on the phone to stop calling her and that she is hanging up. As she is getting ready for a bath, she hears a knock on the door and looks to see who it is. At SVU, Benson is in her office sitting at her desk and comments to Rollins she did 12, steps today, then tells Rollins not to ask her about her pulse. Rollins explains that Fin and Carisi both have Knicks tickets but if she is more than happy to stay if Benson needs her. Benson tells her to go; Benson promises to be out of there shortly as she promised Noah she would have dessert with him. Benson replies Rollins is pregnant and can hide it with clothes but and Rollins says they will have to notify One PP. Benson explains she can give her a week, max. Benson gets a phone call and asks the caller if homicide was notified. She says she is on her way. Rollins says she will come with her and Benson tells her no. But Rollins reminds her she said she had a week, and Benson sighs. Her bathtub overflowed and alerted the neighbors. She was mutilated, her ribcage cut out. The scene is gruesome and Benson tells Rollins to get back but Rollins pushes forward, saying she is fine, but she quickly looks like she is going to throw up and she quickly moves off. Later, Fin is on the scene as Benson explains that Vicki was stabbed multiple times in the chest and torso and sexually assaulted with a table leg. With the sexual component, homicide wants the SVU to take the lead. Fin says he will check the traffic cams and canvas the area. Carisi asks Rollins if she is okay; she says it is just hormones. She thinks the attack was personal, describing it to Carisi. She got something on the address; the owners of the house are Richard and Laura Shane with a Connecticut area code. Benson tells her to have them meet them at the morgue. Their daughter Abby lives there when she is working out of town. They asks her to make an ID by a photo but Laura wants to see her. It is not Abby. They do not know who she is. Laura tries to call Abby again but is going straight to voice mail. Abby is doing one of those dystopian horror stories in Pennsylvania where women lose all rights and get hung from trees. She moved in a week ago after breaking up with her boyfriend Brad who was stalking her. She says her mom ran off when she was five and her dad died last year, she was messed up. She seemed better lately, confident and happier. Rollins says her last call came from a burner and her cell went dead at 8: No social media presence and she closed her Facebook account. Carisi adds she just quit her job and dumped her boyfriend. Fin comments the female empowerment class did the trick " Carisi adding until last night. Fin says her girlfriend says Vicki was feeling bad about herself until she joined the ladies group, Rollins stating her last ten checks were made out to Accredo Inc. Rollins asks who knew there was so much money in insecurity. The 70s was the joy of sex, the 80s is getting rich, the 90s is staying young. Rollins says now is female empowerment, and Carisi adds it is what women want. She says they are late but asks them to come in. They tell the woman they are here to talk about Vicki Parson. Arlo is inside, giving a motivational talk to a group of women. After he praises Claudia, he welcomes Carisi and Rollins and, noticing she is pregnant, congratulates her and says she is beautiful, adding it suits her. He says she is conflicted by it and terrified of losing control and being vulnerable. He says she has been hurt badly in her life and he is sorry about that. Rollins looks slightly unsettled and Carisi quickly introduces themselves as NYPD and they have a few questions. He glances back at Lilah and she joins him as they move to another room. Arlo explains that Vicki took classes and workshops and was living in the house for a few weeks on an intensive program. Lilah, the coordinator, helped Vicki settle in. They last saw her yesterday at a workshop in the city. Carisi explains she was murdered and they want info on her ex-boyfriend Brad. Lilah says it is Brad Simon who was line cook at Lucky Dog. Arlo explains Brad is why Vicki came to Accredo, he was abusive. Lilah adds he hacked her Facebook account last week and posted intimate photos. This is just the beginning. You deserve to die. He denies killing her but they show her what he wrote on Facebook. He has no receipt and says he and Vicki used to go there all the time. He still denies killing her. He admits he was angry. They explain the attack and he has no idea what they are talking about. Carisi shows him a photo from the crime scene. Benson is observing with Rollins and asks what else they have on Brad. Rollins has nothing but Benson thinks the Facebook post is enough for a warrant, adding Fin and Carisi will do it. Rollins seems to agree. Carisi states any evidence of the relationship Fin thinks this means everything. In the kitchen, Fin sees a knife missing on the holder but finds what he thinks is the missing knife in the dishwasher. Fin thinks the guy would be off the hook if he just did his laundry. She came to Accredo because of how she dealt with men, she would let him take control. At Accredo they are forced to face their fears and she took control. They went to his apartment and he passed out. She got there after 9: She wonders that he killed her before she met him. Rollins brings up the tattoo, which she says looks more like a brand of A H and M. They thought it was a great idea, and Lilah has one as well. Arlo agrees, if it will help put Brad behind bars. Benson says she will take the inside. She makes comments about hypocritical men who support feminism, and Benson states she runs her unit. Lilah asks who runs her? Meanwhile, Arlo helps Rollins one of the other rooms where men beds are at. Lilah continues to explain to Benson about her own experiences at work, and that after Arlo she gave them her notice and runs her own shop and only women work for her now. Arlo tells Rollins about the women who come to him having sexual problems and Rollins counters she is sure he is happy to cure them. Because men have A, disappointed her and B, demeaned her.

From our analysis thus far we know that the existing capitalist society â€” with its state, ruling class, and legal system â€” effectively suppresses resistance that threatens its survival. We realize also that the consciousness of the public has traditionally been manipulated by an official ideology that serves the existing order.
