Defense Spending Summary The passage of the Department of Defense DOD authorization and appropriations bills through Congress often does not follow the course laid out in textbooks on legislative procedure. Tracking DOD authorization or appropriation bills can be confusing and time-consuming. This has been particularly true in recent years, when continuing resolutions CRs containing the DOD and other appropriation bills have been enacted in lieu of the 12 regular appropriations bills for the entire U. This report includes all the pertinent information on the passage of these bills through the legislative process: Significant definitions are also included. This report will be updated as legislative activity warrants. FY and the following reports: Highlights of FY Defense Appropriations Actions , by [author name scrubbed] and [author name scrubbed].

The DOD Authorization-Appropriations Process Before no prior authorization was required for defense appropriations, except for construction funds. In , the Armed Services Committees attached a rider to the construction authorization P. The committees hoped thereby to recapture a share of the control over defense programs exercised by the Appropriations Committees alone. The appropriations bill provides budget authority for military departments and defense agencies to draw funds from the Treasury. Authorization and Appropriation The congressional budget process distinguishes between "authorizations," which establish or define the activities of the federal government, and "appropriations," which finance those activities. In itself an authorization does not provide funding for government activities. An authorization generally provides legal authority for the government to act, usually by establishing, continuing, or restricting a federal agency, program, policy, project, or activity. It may also, explicitly or implicitly, authorize subsequent congressional action to provide appropriations for those purposes. An appropriation generally provides both the legal authority to obligate future payments from the Treasury, and the ability to make subsequent payments to satisfy those obligations. Ideally, the authorization-appropriations process would proceed in an orderly sequence with each step of the process generating a part of the information trail. These tables reflect an earlier authorization-appropriations process from to In the simplest case, the process begins with the President submitting his budget proposal initially formulated by DOD and formally submitted by the President through the Office of Management and Budget to the defense authorizing and appropriations committees. Then, for example, for the defense authorization bill, hearings are held by the appropriate House committees and subcommittees. The bill is marked up and an authorization bill is reported out, usually with a written, numbered report. This bill is debated in the House, amended or not as the case may be, and passed by the House with the vote noted in the Congressional Record. This bill would then be sent to the Senate, debated, and passed. However, the Senate can amend the House bill or report out its own bill, debate, amend, and pass it. If the House and Senate versions differ, the stage is set for reconciling differences. This may be by a conference committee appointed by the leadership of each chamber. This committee then negotiates a compromise bill that is reported to both houses. Votes on the conference agreement are then taken in both chambers. If passed it is sent to the President for his consideration and signature. Ideally, after the authorization bill is passed, the appropriations bill goes through this same process. Although conceptually a sequential process, authorization and appropriations bills can be considered at the same time or even passed in reverse order. For instance, the Senate can report out a bill, and then substitute the text of the Senate bill for the text of the bill passed by the House while retaining the House bill number. Other events can occur to render the tracking of a bill and its contents difficult. Bills are sometimes reported out without an accompanying committee report to provide context for the legislative language. Voice votes or unanimous consent agreements may be granted instead of recorded votes, rendering it impossible to determine which Member voted for or against the bill or amendments offered during floor consideration. In addition, there may be times when a fiscal year ends without the enactment of some appropriations bills. Under those circumstances, Congress usually passes a continuing resolution CR , which grants a temporary extension of budget authority for a specified period of time and purpose. CRs also typically specify that the funds provided may be used only for activities funded in the previous fiscal year. Overview of Components and Recent Practices , by [author name scrubbed] and [author name scrubbed]. Methods of Voting There are several types of votes: The section below is based on "Methods of Voting in the House and Senate: Division vote" those in favor or opposed stand, and the chair takes a head count: Recorded vote" Members vote electronically, each recorded vote is given a sequential number, and vote totals plus how each Member voted are recorded in the Congressional Record. Teller vote" an older method in which Members were counted as they passed between chair-appointed tellers for the "ayes" and "noes"; only vote totals are announced and there is no record of how individual Members voted. Unanimous consent vote" usually reserved for noncontroversial legislation. Voice vote" the presiding officer calls for the "ayes" and then the "noes," Members shout in chorus on one side or the other, and the chair decides the result.
