Bigsby had been living with Hepatitis C for more than 40 years when the disease stepped up its attack on his body. His liver was damaged and scarred, almost to the point of cirrhosis. So Bigsby went online to contact an India-based "buyers club" -- a group that exploits wrinkles in international patent law and drug regulation in order to supply cheap medicine to people in need. Unlike other countries, India does not award patents for minor improvements to existing drugs, and instead forces developers to prove they have made a significant scientific advancement. The pharmaceutical industry and U. Advocates, who are appealing the decision, fear the precedent could disrupt global access to other expensive drugs. Bigsby, the fisherman, was on a plane to India just one week after exchanging messages with Jefferys.
