Chapter 2 : Editions of English Grammar: A University Course by Angela Downing

Course in English Grammar, which broke new ground by offering to advanced students of English a comprehensive course, based on Halliday's Systemic Functional Grammar. It went beyond the merely structural, to present an integrated account of structure and.

The butter is in the drawer. Fred took a picture of Sue. Susan is pulling your leg. Whom did Jim give his dog to? You should give it up. Note that not just verbs can be part of the matrix predicate, but also adjectives, nouns, prepositions, etc. The words of the predicate need not form a string nor a constituent, [12] but they can be interrupted by their arguments or adjuncts. The approach to predicates illustrated with these sentences is widespread in Europe, particularly in Germany. While the predicate cannot be construed as a constituent in the formal sense, it is a catena. Barring a discontinuity, predicates and their arguments are always catenae in dependency structures. Predicators[edit] Some theories of grammar seek to avoid the confusion generated by the competition between the two predicate notions by acknowledging predicators. On this approach, the periphrastic verb catenae briefly illustrated in the previous section are predicators. Further illustrations are provided next: The predicators are in blue. These verb catenae generally contain a main verb and potentially one or more auxiliary verbs. The auxiliary verbs help express functional meaning of aspect and voice. Since the auxiliary verbs contribute functional information only, they do not qualify as separate predicators, but rather each time they form the matrix predicator with the main verb. Carlson classes[edit] The seminal work of Greg Carlson distinguishes between types of predicates. Stage-level predicates[edit] A stage-level predicate is true of a temporal stage of its subject. For example, if John is "hungry", then he typically will eat some food. His state of being hungry therefore lasts a certain amount of time, and not his entire lifespan. Stage-level predicates can occur in a wide range of grammatical constructions and are probably the most versatile kind of predicate. Individual-level predicates[edit] An individual-level predicate is true throughout the existence of an individual. For example, if John is "smart", this is a property that he has, regardless of which particular point in time we consider. Individual-level predicates are more restricted than stage-level ones. Individual-level predicates cannot occur in presentational "there" sentences a star in front of a sentence indicates that it is odd or ill-formed: There are police available. Individual-level predicates do not, e. Tyrone spoke French loudly in the corridor. The subject must be assumed to be dead or otherwise out of existence. Kind-level predicates[edit] A kind-level predicate is true of a kind of thing, but cannot be applied to individual members of the kind. An example of this is the predicate are widespread. One cannot meaningfully say of a particular individual John that he is widespread. One may only say this of kinds, as in Cats are widespread. Certain types of noun phrases cannot be the subject of a kind-level predicate. We have just seen that a proper name cannot be. Singular indefinite noun phrases are also banned from this environment: Collective predicates require their subjects to be somehow plural, while distributive ones do not. An example of a collective predicate is "formed a line". This predicate can only stand in a nexus with a plural subject: The students formed a line. Other examples of collective predicates include meet in the woods, surround the house, gather in the hallway and carry the piano together. Note that the last one carry the piano together can be made non-collective by removing the word together. Quantifiers differ with respect to whether or not they can be the subject of a collective predicate. For example, quantifiers formed with all the can, while ones formed with every or each cannot. All the students formed a line. All the students gathered in the hallway. All the students carried a piano together.
