Direct and indirect speech If we want to say what other people said, thought or felt, we can use the direct or indirect speech. He said he liked it. He thought that Irene was late. She hoped she would pass the exam. The indirect speech is typically introduced by verbs such as say, tell, admit, complain, explain, remind, reply, think, hope, offer, refuse etc. She explained that she had been at the seaside. If these verbs are in the past tense, we change the following: Present - past "I never understand you," she told me. Present perfect - past perfect "I have broken the window," he admitted. Past - past perfect "She went to Rome," I thought. Will - conditional Will changes into the conditional. I will come on Sunday," he reminded me. As you can see, both the past tense and the present perfect change into the past perfect. I shall, we shall usually become would. I should, we should usually change into would. The verb forms remain the same in the following cases: If we use the past perfect tense. If the reporting verb is in the present tense. When we report something that is still true. When a sentence is made and reported at the same time and the fact is still true. With modal verbs would, might, could, should, ought to, used to. After wish, would rather, had better, it is time. We do not change the past tense in spoken English if it is clear from the situation when the action happened. We must change it, however, in the following sentence, otherwise it will not be clear whether we are talking about the present or past feelings. If the modal verb must does not express obligation, we do not change it. B Pronouns We have to change the pronouns to keep the same meaning of a sentence. Sometimes we have to use a noun instead of a pronoun, otherwise the new sentence is confusing. If we only make mechanical changes Kevin said he had killed them , the new sentence can have a different meaning - Kevin himself killed them. This and these are usually substituted. Mary said Greg had come yesterday, it is not correct, because it means that he came on Saturday. The time expressions change as follows. Note If something is said and reported at the same time, the time expressions can remain the same. On the other hand, if something is reported later, the time expressions are different in the indirect speech. Last week Jim said: Jim said he was playing this week. Here usually becomes there. But sometimes we make different adjustments. Reported questions Direct questions become reported questions with the same word order as statements. The reporting verb say changes into ask, want to know, wonder If is more common and whether is more formal. Reported commands, requests and advice The commands, requests and advice mostly have the same form in English: In the direct speech we do not mention the person in the imperative. In the indirect speech the person addressed must be mentioned. Tell can introduce statements, commands, requests or advice. The form is different, however. Commands, requests or advice with tell "Leave the room," he told John. Similarly ask is used in reported questions, commands, requests or advice in different forms. Questions with ask "Will you make coffee? Commands, requests or advice with ask "Make coffee, please," he said.

Reported Questions So now you have no problem with making reported speech from positive and negative sentences. But how about questions? Where do you live? How can we make the reported speech here? The tense changes are the same, and we keep the question word. So we need to change the grammar to a normal positive sentence. Maybe this example will help: She asked me where I lived. Do you see how I made it? The direct question is in the present simple tense. Then I need to change the verb to the past simple. She asked me where Julie was. We make the question form of the present simple of be by inverting changing the position of the subject and verb. So, we need to change them back before putting the verb into the past simple. Here are some more examples: Direct Question Where is the Post Office, please? She asked me where the Post Office was. What are you doing? She asked me what I was doing. Who was that fantastic man? She asked me who that fantastic man had been. Do you like chocolate? She asked me if I liked chocolate. Here are a few more examples:
