I had this counter that I used when checking in merchandise and I would find myself leaning against it to get some supportâ€¦I found myself also actually curling my toes to help with balance. To this day the toes on my left foot are curled down. About this same time, I noticed that my hand writing was getting worse and worse and went on to being very small. Then shortly before I was diagnosed with PD, I was walking in the Mall and started feeling very strange and was having a very hard time walking. At this point I also noticed I had little or no arm swing. Shortly after this I was dx. It had taken almost 2 years to get it figured out. Within a few days of starting meds, I felt like a different person. It has progressed to my whole hand and sometimes arm shakes and my head bobbles and when the meds do wear off, I can feel my whole body tremble. Seems like everything I try to do I end up needing help. It had gotten quite small and seemed to always slant down. Then came the balance and my legs started just feeling strange and on my right side I started noticing I had no arm swing. Soon after my left would shake to a point my entire arm is one big tremor. My left flank is on and off in a rigid state. Then I discovered I could barely wiggle my right toes. Then it felt like I had to drag my right leg. I had several people ask why my hand was shaking. At that point I also had a pinched nerve on my right side witch made my hand numb. Next came the MJF pinkie flutter, the index finger and then the thumb. I felt like just sleeping on my porch, I was too tired to get up and go to bed. My legs hurt bad, had muscle pain and cramps. I developed major anxiety that I have never experienced before and then a weird feeling in my right foot that impaired my walking. I was in denial for quite a while after diagnosis. Then I started noticing my back would ache, especially if I was tired.
