View original I think all of America can agree on one thing. We are tired of Winter and ready for Spring to behave. I am so tired of rain. I know the whole, April showers bring May flowers, thing, but March was so overcast and rainy. I am ready for sunny, warm, and dry weather. I know you guys with snow are definitely ready for a change! I ordered and got in some beautiful new gemstones this week. One kind in particular stood out and I made a few pieces yesterday. They are made with Amber, Honey, Yellow Heliodor. It is part of the beryl family like Emerald and Aquamarine. It was found sometime between I found a couple of conflicting years, but it is named from the Greek for "gift from the sun. They are also called golden beryl. Which sounds like golden bear, and they do like the color of the bears filled with honey at the store! In this pair of earrings I had to resist my temptation not to add too much. Just click on any title and it will take you to the listing. Amber Honey Heliodor and African White Opal I also got in cornflower blue Kyanite that looks like a pretty blue sky so I added them in with the yellow. I did put Karen Hill Tribe silver beads with these. They really make the blue pop! These turned out really pretty. I have them on ear threaders, but can put them on any kind of ear wire. The color of green is gorgeous and one day I will go to a place that has that color of water. They are also on Sterling Silver ear threaders with the U arch that cradles the ear lobe for a more secure and stable fit. I am so excited about these coming soon additions. I am working on them to get them ready for listing. I have so many pretty colors and such a variety of charms and beads! I am adding some of the Pave Rose Cut Diamond charms to them also. The bottom two are necklaces for men. This post first appeared on Sweet Tea And Sisters , please read the original post:

Chapter 2 : Sweet Tea and Sisters: "Gift From The Sun"

Considered a gift from the sun, cool green peridot sparkles enticingly in its sterling setting. Flowers surround the gem, adorning a handcrafted ring by the talented Nyoman Rena.

Nov 24, Sehrish added it This is our main text for Literacy for the next 10 days for SBT1 and I am teaching the first lesson in which I will introduce the text to the children. This book is about a man called Thulani living in Africa wanting a simple life basking in the sun but his wife Dora was very hard working. One day when Thulani is milking the cow he decides that he is tired of milking the cow so he goes and sells the cow and brings home a grizzly old billy goat but his wife was not happy. Thulani goes back to enjoying himself in the sun but one day the goat strays into their house and eats all their seeds. Thulani then goes and sells the goat and brings home a sheep. His wife is still not happy but thinks at least they can sell her fleece. One day when Thulani Shears the sheep he thinks to himself this work is too much and goes and exchanges the sheep for 3 geese. The next day he goes back and exchanges the geese with some seeds hoping his wife Dora would be pleased with him. As the seeds grow Dora realises that Thulani had planted sunflower seeds. Dora was not happy! Thulani was sad because all he wanted to do was please his wife but was not able to do that in anyway. Then one day as the Sunflowers dropped seeds to the ground Thulani gets a gift from the sun which changes his life forever This book is suitable for KS1 as they will be able to explore what life is like in Africa and will be introduced to a variety imaginative vocabulary. I have prepared some colorful images of the animals we meet in the story for ch to go back to as the planned lessons will build up to children retelling the story themselves. I have also chosen some challenging vocabulary from the story which i will thread during the introduction of the story and also keep it displayed on the white board for children to use when they are retelling. I really enjoyed this book and hope that the children enjoy it too. Gift of the Sun: A Tale from South Africa Author: Thulani loved to bask all day in the sun. A South African farmer trades a cow because he likes to sleep in the sun instead of working. Once he trades away nearly everything he can far Title: Once he trades away nearly everything he can farm, he needs to find a way to make do with what he has left to try and get more valuable resources. School Library Journal Grade ? Thulani loves to spend his days sitting in the sun and hates to have his leisure interrupted by chores. Tired of milking the cow, he trades her in for a goat. When the goat gets into the corn seed, he exchanges it for a sheep. When shearing it is too much trouble, he buys some geese. With each trade, his hard-working wife becomes more and more exasperated. Thinking to please her, the man exchanges the geese for a bag of seeds. But when they sprout, Dora is more upset than ever. However, when Thulani feeds the sunflower seeds to the chickens, the hens begin to lay more eggs, and, in the end, the story has come full circle. Dora is delighted, and Thulani is now busy trading animals. His favorite time of day is milking time? Bright gold end papers scattered with seeds introduce the good-humored mood. The color scheme of soft greens and golds emphasizes the warm pastoral setting. This is a fresh, funny variation on the "Lazy Jack" theme, with illustrations done in a folkart style and filled with little details of South African rural life.? Kirkus Reviews The plainspoken tale of a rural South African who seeks to simplify his life by selling his encumbrances. Thulani prefers basking in the sun to milking his cow, so he sells the cow and buys a goat. He continues to trade down, until he is left with nothing more than some sunflower seeds. In a twist of fate, the sunflower seeds lead Thulani back to prosperity. He realizes that milking cows leads to some of his best thinking. Response to Two Professional Reviews: I really enjoyed this book because of all the different steps Thulani takes when trading the animals. I agree that the illustrations really help paint a picture of the life on the farm. Since it takes place in Africa I really like how the illustrations are able to set the scene so well especially with the detail of the expressions of the characters in each page. Evaluation of Literary Elements: This book does an awesome job of addressing the themes of being persistent and solving problems. He could be upset and discouraged when his initial trades end up giving them nothing but sunflower seeds, but he uses them to grow his farm even larger than it originally was. Consideration of Instructional Application: For my class application, I think that I would like to create a class game with the trade aspect of The Gift of the Sun. It could be used for a math lesson because they all could pick something different to start out with on their farm, then they could trade things at the market to get other things they would like. This way they could follow the same problem solving that Thulani had to go through, plus they could see what it takes to take care of each animal. The students would have a certain amount of money to start out with and then they could spend that money to buy different resources at the market to set themselves up for later. I think it would be a fun game about budgeting and just trade in general.

Chapter 4 : 32 Beach Gifts For Sun, Sand & Surf Lovers in - gift lab

Gift From the Gods is a new quest in AC Origins. It's part of the collaboration with Final Fantasy XV, and when you complete it, you'll get a sword, a shield and the Chocobo mount. There's a sundial puzzle you might have trouble with, which is why we've decided to write this AC Origins Gift.

If you were bad in life do you have nightmares? She sounds urgent, but oddly calming. You try to focus on the voice. Can you hear me? Someone holds a small cup up to your mouth. A small sliver of lukewarm water slides down your throat. Every cell it touches tries to gobble as much of it as possible. The air is cooler here. They were bloodshot, unfocused, and sunken. You were laying in a raised position on a pile of cushions. There were sashes and folded curtains everywhere. It looked like some sort of massive canvas tent. Your eyes trailed to your right. Death appearing to you as silver and morning rays. The recently dead never look good. My dog should be here. The side of your face is held by a spread of long white feathers. They feel like flower petals and silk against your cheek. You are carefully lowered to the ground. Her violet eyes are wide with concern. She speaks low and stern. You are not dead, do you understand? She presses the side of her warm muzzle into your palm. Fine, smooth strands of fur brush against your blistered and bruised hands. There will be a cost. Not even I can say what it will be. Nod if you understand. She whispers something quietly to herself before continuing. Once we begin we cannot stop. There is no turning back from this, but right now at this very moment you have no other option. Of course I will. She looks around the room to make sure no one else is around, it seems. Satisfied she raises her head. You hear a soft buzz and her horn begins to glow. She bites her lips and her back legs begins to quiver. Her chest rises and falls quickly. Her nostrils widen and pained moans still manage to slip from her mouth despite her best efforts to keep it closed. They jiggle gently as her thighs shift uncomfortably. White, rounded, topped with broad and bright-pink nipples. She lowers her head and grunts quietly. The glowing strands of her hair fall over her forehead. This requires much effort on her part. Her graceful neck cranes along her side to inspect her modified features. They hung freely, but not comically so. Their fullness just looked like a sign of wealth on her body. Now that you got a good look at her, everything about her looked full. Her billowing hair and tail, her bright eyes, her folded wings, and even the curve of her backside. A true matriarch in every sense of the word. Her face turned all-business and she approached you again. She reached down with those gentle wings and turned you onto your left side and placed a pillow under your head. Once she was satisfied with your position she laid herself down beside you. Or nearly on top of you. The heat radiating off them is almost unbearable Unlike the dry scorch of the desert, this heat was inviting and soft. It was the warmth of coming home. It was clear what she wanted you to do. Your mouth hung open. Warm air seeped into your lungs. Desperation drives a man to do the craziest of things, but were you really about suckle from a horse, hallucination or not? It was white, and it glistened in the warm light of the tent. Your mouth was dry, your lips were bleeding. Your throat was raw. Weak jaws and muscles worked inexpertly at her nipple, but eventually you managed to find a steady rhythm that let you draw her gift into you. Better than all the riches and pleasures in the world. As soon as it touched the tip of your tongue you could feel it healing. It was rich, thick, and hot in the best of ways. You licked your tongue around your lips, spreading the milk around like a salve. It was like a breath of clean air. This was not a regular thing for her. Her thighs shuddered and raised into your chest. Her head pressed into a pillow and she bit her lip while taking heavy breaths. Your felt the bone in your arm reset. The pain was ebbing. You flexed your hand and marveled that there was no stinging. Cautiously you stretched you arm out of the tourniquet. It fell away easily. All you felt was a dull stiffness. You reached your healing arm around her generous upper thigh and held onto her flank to improve your grasp on her wondrous milk. She had a dreamy smile on her face and pawed pleurably at her face. A hoof reached down and began to stroke your back. You could walk another hundred miles in the desert if you needed too. Hell, you could jog for two hundred! You pull away quickly coughing and gagging. You wipe a thick trail of milk and saliva away from your mouth, and try to center yourself. The blisters and cuts are gone. Your arm feels amazing. You pull on your skin and are relieved when it bounces back instead of hanging stiffly. That can come later. You shake your head. All of you was healed.

No more need to debase yourself like that. The horses brows came together in worry. You took a step toward her, a look of confusion on your face. I can stop now, right? Your mouth felt bone dry. You tried to stand back up, but felt compelled to move closer and closer to her. You were like a magnet. Those bountiful cups became the center of gravity in your universe and pulled you close no matter how hard you fought. You were more steady, but drank even deeper.
