It is important to note that instruction is just as much a part of this model as it is in the classroom model. In WPF, think of instruction as an anchor for the rest of the learning process. The learning process in WPF is very different than traditional models because it is built upon different values. The WPF model embraces the following values: Lifelong WPF recognizes first and foremost that faith formation is a life-long process. It is not an age-group-specific program with a definitive enrollment and exit time. While most catechetical leaders agree wholeheartedly with the value of lifelong faith formation, many traditional models do not have a high success rate in retaining learners beyond eighth grade. Intergenerational As a lifelong process, WPF values all learners at every stage of the life cycle and the relationships that form between them. In a culture where multiple generations of family typically do not live in the same location, these intergenerational relationships are extremely important to the learning process and, thus, highly valued. This value also emphasizes the critical importance of forming adults in their faith. By including adults of all ages in the learning process, WPF actively seeks to engage adults in continuing faith formation. The working assumption is that adults more fully formed in their faith will be better equipped to pass that faith on to the younger generations. Finally, this value recognizes the diverse set of circumstances facing people today. Using a term such as households to describe those who participate reinforces that all are welcome, from the traditional family, to the senior citizen, to the single young adult, etc. Gathered This learning process relies on having the faith community gathered at the same time to experience the same formation, as opposed to separating the age groups across the year for independent learning. Learning with the community that worships together is an extremely high value in WPF which could not happen in the same way if age groups always met for independent learning. In parishes where space will not allow the entire faith community to gather at one time, multiple gathering times should be offered, similar in concept to a parish having multiple worship times to accommodate their parishioners. Core Curriculum Imagine having the ability to teach all of the learners in a parish the same concepts at the same time. This is the value of a Core Curriculum. When the intergenerational faith community of lifelong learners is gathered together as a learning community, they learn and grow in faith together. The topic for a given week or month is THE catechetical topic for the faith community and parish leadership can count on that as they develop programming in other areas. An example of this might be the priests incorporating this topic in their homilies in some way. Participation WPF seeks to help form the faithful in such a way that they will be better able to participate in the life of their faith community. Through growing in understanding about the topic, by forming relationships with other people, and sharing faith in new ways, the participants of the learning sessions will be better prepared to participate in the faith life of the parish. Not only will they understand what is going on in their faith communities more fully, they will be able to experience it with people with whom they have built faith relationships. No ministries run programs that conflict with it and every ministry participates in it. Deviation from this value, however slight, undermines the success of WPF. In fact, not adhering to this value is why so many parishes have experienced difficulty implementing intergenerational approaches. It truly requires a paradigm shift in the parish. Value Added Doing a WPF model does not preclude the possibility of other age-group specific ministries or programming. The key is that ministries do not recreate what WPF has already done, but enhance it. Think of these ministries as ways for parishioners to live out what they are learning in WPF. Each of the values named above work together to create the WPF model. If a parish embraced one or two of these values which many do, it would not automatically translate into a WPF model. Just like the classroom instructional methodology was created to serve a specific set of values, so was WPF. Understanding the purpose of each of these values and seeing how they inter-relate with one another is the first step of assessing whether or not a WPF model
