Original Question How do you play piano by ear? I am just making an assumption that your finger dexterity is ok and that you are not tone deaf. Can you sing with correct pitch? Does your friends ever comment that you sing ok or off pitch. If you are sing ok, then you are a good candidate to Play By Ear. For a start, if you can work out melodies by ear, then it would be great. If not, let me know and I will see how to guide you through. And if you can do that, putting harmony into the song is just a snap. All you need is for someone to hand you the keys to unlock the "door". I hope I can be that one. See if you can digest the below: Next, feel each chord and notice each have different character which you need to recognize - much like how you recognize faces by eyes ; only this time, your ear must do the detecting. Chord V7 G7 gives you the "unfinished" and also seems to be "getting smaller, softer, weaker, going in" feeling; and Chord I C gives you the "Settled, Finished" feeling. Test it out and see. Using these feelings, you can practically listen to a song and knows what goes where without even writing in down or testing it out. Just like recognizing faces, you just have to try it out often in many songs. Now try it for simple folk songs, especially Happy Birthday. It may come to you immediately or sometimes, nothing at all. For a while, it might seem like it is not coming to you or you are not getting it. Suddenly, like a bell hammer, it will "slam" on you and you will be suddenly enlightened! There are more but I will have to leave you to test this principle out first before you try out the rest. Check me out at tuition. The rest of the details are there in the video ebooks.

Original Question Short and easy guitar chord songs like happy birthday? I can play happy birthday pretty good now, Is there any other easy and short ones to practice chords on and fun ones to play like happy birthday? This is probably way before your time, but "Knocking on Heavens Door" by Bob Dylan is a very easy song. Guns N Roses covered it as well. The verse just goes back and forth between these two chord progressions. Then the chorus is just G D C. Below are the lyrics also. I have been playing the piano by sight reading for almost 5 years now but I really want to learn how to play by ear. Should i switch to Suzuki or stay with the traditional way? You can stick with the traditional way and still learn to play by ear. Like others have said, if you want to do more complex by-ear learning, you may want to seek training in jazz or other improvisation oriented disciplines as well. From what I understand, Suzuki method essentially exposes the student to the music so that it becomes internalized the student knows the piece or at least how it sounds before the student actually sees the sheet music for it. Go to your library and borrow a stack of CDs with folk tunes or short pieces even classical, pop, rock, or anything else you may be interested in and if you hear a song you really like, sit down and try to figure out at least the chord progression or the melody. Once you can do all of this even if only a little bit at a time or in parts , you then can begin composing your own music! Not a bad perk eh? Ideally, you will have command of the music theory, an inner creative desire to play the music, as well as the technique and tactile familiarity the "feel" with your instrument that allows you to express your music the way you want to. This is immensely beneficial in classical music as well, as it can cut down your sight reading times and just make learning and performing pieces a more interesting and engaging process. Play a game where without looking, try to match the pitch or repeat a melody that your friend is playing and vice versa. Good luck and have fun!
