"HEY, BOSS, WE DID A GOOD JOB, DIDN'T WE?" Alone in the Oval Office on Monday, November 4, , John F. Kennedy dictated a memo about a maelstrom he had set in motion half a world away--the assassination of an American ally, President Ngo Dinh Diem of South Vietnam.

Here we go! 1. Is it rude to refuse to talk on the phone? I am in charge of creating labels for an annual event that every MFA first-year has responsibilities for. Since we are putting up the show in a week, I sent a group message three days ago asking people to give me the information for the labels by today so I could work on it after my job this was approved by my supervisor. Most of them have been prompt, but one person messaged me today, the deadline, asking if she could talk to me in person or on the phone about her labels. This was in the morning, before I woke up at 9: The conversation is below: So, for my label I would like it to be done a little differently. Will you be around campus today? Or you can call me phone number Me: Okay then! She then typed the information she wanted put onto the card and how it was to be formatted. It is different than typical gallery labels, but the instructions were: Thank you for your patience. How do I change the way I message people to avoid offending them? She is also in her 30s and I am Could you email me instead? I posted it this morning! Give your bosses the respect of just being matter-of-fact about this! My company wants me to impart years of knowledge to someone in my last week on the job My current role is multi-faceted. Can I ask your thoughts? Leaving soon after getting a bonus I expect to receive a bonus around the holidays for work performed throughout the year. This will be the first bonus I receive from this employer, as I started late in the last year. If I am still employed when bonuses are given and quit within a month or two of receiving the bonus, is there any necessity to pay it back, or feel uneasy about accepting? Do people care what days I take off? I still struggle with getting the hang of white-collar culture, and your blog has been a huge help. That brings me to my question. Does anyone care what days their colleagues use their PTO? I ask because I just took Halloween off for no reason at all, and wondered if it seemed childish. I requested it three weeks in advance, and it was quickly approved. I just wanted a day off, and Halloween at work is a total productivity-free zone. I volunteer for an art studio and that week is typically when we have our biggest festival of the year. You may also like:

I am a seperated woman that was involved with a married man for a year. It started innocently by me taking my daughter to her friends house. We just talked about the kids and school. We saw each other through these drop offs and pick ups about 5 times a week. I learned his wife traveled on business 2 weeks out of the month. My then husband and I were in the process of divorce. Throughout the next month, he talked more to me and I became interested in him. I told him I felt like I was living like a single mom and he told me his marriage was not good and they were living in denial and putting on a front for their kids. He started complimenting me and I would be excited for the next play date with our kids so I could see him. Once I realized he was really pursuing me I started flirting back thinking that his marriage was bad like he told me. He told me that everyone at work told him how happy he seemed and I was so happy too. A month later we had sex. We emailed hundreds of times and got together whenever his wife was out of town. The compliments poured in as well as talk of the future. Months later I found out that he was offered a job transfer in another state. His wife would be able to transfer as well. Finally 1 week before, he told me he was moving. He held me tight but had stopped telling me he loved me. I asked if we were going to see each other before he left he said he hoped so. The days kept passing and I watched out my window as he drove away! Without saying good bye. He never called or emailed to explain what or why it happened this way. He had told me early on that he had another affair in the past shortly after he got married. Why after a year of not only sexual but emotional attatchments would he just leave me here to pick up the pieces of my life and he gets to go start a new life? Without even saying goodbye? So after a week without him explaining anything to me, I went to his wife. She was still here selling their house. I told her I knew she had her suspicions and would answer any questions she had. I also returned to her a flannel shirt he gave me and a pair of boxer shorts he gave me. He was good at lying to me and sweet talking me do you think he could have sweet talked his way out of those boxer shorts to his wife? She told me they had talked about divorce in the past and this just puts the nail in the coffin. Why would she be so nice to me? Would a woman stay with a man after she knew about 2 affairs? How does a man say all he said to me over the year, and then leave with no goodbye? Why would he leave and not say goodbye? Because he is a philanderer. Chances are that any woman who gets involved with him will end up deeply hurt and very disappointed. Your part in this is that you had an affair with a married man. I know you were feeling vulnerable at the time. I understand that it felt wonderful to feel wanted. Let him do the honorable thing and deal with his wife and his marriage first. If he does get his divorce, then and only then does it make sense to explore the relationship. You asked why his wife stays with him. She has young children. Apparently she has made some difficult compromises in order to keep her marriage together, at least for now. Be grateful that she responded to you as she did. I suggest you take some hard lessons from all this and move on. I wish you well. Marie is licensed as both a psychologist and marriage and family counselor. Chapter 3 : Seven Psychopaths () - Quotes - IMDb

If someone or something is really ticking you off, don't project your anger onto others, especially not your boss. If it's a good job, be grateful for it.

Last Updated Mar 30, That depends entirely on how you do it. I mean, do you like a mediocre work force? The problem with asking for feedback is that few candidates really want "feedback. So, when a rejected candidate calls and asks for feedback, it generally goes something like this: We went with someone who had more experience. But the job posting said 5 years. I have 6 years of experience in that area. Yes, but we went with someone more qualified. But I met everything on the job description! Yes, but the person we hired can do handstands while talking on the telephone. I can do handstands. Remember, everyone who makes it to the interview stage is qualified. The candidate will always have an objection and a reason why the hiring manager made the wrong decision. Well, that and the ever present fear of lawsuits. If you really want to get feedback, you have to make it clear that you are only listening. I recommend email for this. Dear Janet Doe, Thank you so much for interviewing me for the analyst job last month. I really enjoyed meeting with you and Steve Jones. Could I ask you to tell me three areas that you think I could improve? I would really appreciate the feedback. Thanks again for your time, Walter Usner Then when you get a reply, no matter what they said, the proper response, is, "Thank you so much for taking the time to do this for me. I really appreciate it. No, "I did not focus too much on X. But, if you do and they respond, be grateful. And seriously consider incorporating their feedback into your job searching protocol.

Chapter 4 : Why You Didn't Get The Job Even After A Great Interview | Dorothy Rawlinson

We know it's important to give positive feedback in response to a job well done. Simple recognition of effort can be a fantastic reward that provides continued motivation for future tasks. But sometimes it seems to get tedious to keep saying "great job" over and over, especially if you work with a large team.

Okay, here we go. You know, like Gandhi or Jesus or that other guy. But, yeah, guess what? Wait, wait a minute. Surely he knows that the Mafia boss is a psycho? Suddenly, from out of every fucking grave burst the seven psychopaths, a gun in every hand. Who the fuck is that? He was hiding up a tree. You scream out, "Kaya! Her head almost comes off. Her head does come off. You scream out her name, all sad, and she dies. You throw your notepad away. Art and peace and all that shit can wait! The black chick from the serial killer killers. Dies in her arms. Anyway, guns, guns, guns! The Vietcong gets hit. With his dying move, he throws his nunchakus and he kills two of the bastards. Peace is for queers. He was just a bit injured and he had a fucking crossbow up his sleeve. And as his soul leaves his body to go dance with the angels, we pan up over the blood-strewn cemetery and off into the pretty blue skies of dawn. Skies blue enough to suggest that maybe there can be peace one day in this troubled but beautiful world. Maybe there can be peace because that would be good!

Chapter 5 : WeKnowMemes - Meme Generator

Marty: How are you ever gonna get a job, Billy, if you break the director guy's nose before you even got the part? Billy: I didn't mean to break his nose. His nose was just in the middle of where I was punching.

After 3 days i found out that he has blocked me on chat. A few days later, he did so with skype too. Why should he do that after being so close and intimate till the previous night. Is it because of the joke i cracked. I even emailed him not to stay cold and break the good friendship we share. Why should a guy be so close and intimate with someone if he is still waiting for his GF. He is not at all a playboy. Always is a focused and studious student. I always never crossed boundaries and maintain it as good friends. Then why should he suddenly block me off the next morning? Is it because he realized he has developed feelings and getting into distraction mode? So he probably he blocked me off. Really confused with his behavior. I am not seeing him now as he is in another course. However will see him 2 months time for a course. How do I rest if I see him again. I fact is I heve developed feelings deep within even though i always stayed a good friend Will he ever come back. I kind of wanted to just joke with him as he would constantly joke with me that he is not my friend and that my colleagues are the ones who are my actual friends. So on that day, I told him that I met an amazing guy in the bus who called me for just a lunch as he was from my same state. He immediately lashed at me saying that I am different to go out with a stranger and people can take advantage of me as I am attractive. He then added saying that we should stop chatting and that it is pointless as I have to focus on my career and become whatever I want and that he is not part of that plan. I then apologized many times and told him it was just a joke and then he cooled down. It was then he told me that he knows me but once trust builds between us, nothing is an issue. This got me confused. Where is trust building in a friendship? Anyway, we then chatted for an hour after that abt rotations, became intimate and then he ended conversation saying that we can continue chat tomorrow at 9 pm. In the morning, I texted him in a friendly manner for the new course he was doing as he was tensed abt it the previous day. It was him who asked my number initially and asked me to text me to see if he received my number. It did as he said. After that it was almost chatting for atleast the next week. He told me about how he was in a relationship for 6 years and how timid the girl was as she could not go against her parents and get married to him. He told me that he then moved on to have another close which he didnt pursue as GF as they both felt that they had not much feelings into it. He is still in good friendly contacts with this girl. It was then that his ex did a drama and came back into his life and has since then remained in his life without any surity. He told my colleagues that they dont get along well and that they fight always even before he met me. He never had any close relationship with any girls other than me in my grp. He told me that even hf his ex comes , there is no guarantee from his side and career is his main focus and he is sick and tired of all the drama. Right from the beginning,he also wanted to know about my life. He wanted to meet up with me as through conversations he found me innocent and someone close he can confide on. Just on the day we had to meet up, he cancelled it saying that its better off us texting as he feels it is a distraction for both of our studies and that he doesnt want any relationship now and situations should not change. Well, I texted him back saying that all I wanted to be was a good friend to him and know him better. But he insisted we only chat and let destiny decide our tale. After that, we only chatted. The chat used to start friendly but will get intimate ultimately. He had inhibitions calling me as a friend although he opened out everything to me and was very intimate and close to me. The last day we chatted was 2 weeks ago. I kind of wanted to j He asked to take me out to dinner when we first started seeing each other. At that time, I was angry and refusing to let anyone else hurt me so I told him that I was not ready. For eight months now, I have only been with him. My feelings have changed and I said the "L" word and he did not say it back. Alright, so to start things off I met this guy who is my bestfriends boyfriends roommate. However, he agreed to fwb, but asked for my number in the morning. Instantly, started texting me and flirting constantly. Is there anyway to change his mind? They broke up about a year after we met but I still wanted to be just friends, a few months ago though I started noticing that I had feelings for him thanks to my family pointing it out. We stay up until 3 am just talking pretty much everyday. I met a man back in April and had a breakfast date one day. He tells me he misses me, he wants me, thinking about me, thinking about spending time with me. After we depart from each other he texts me and tells me he enjoyed my company. At one point he asked me when will i spend the night with him I started working at this grocery store about 6 months ago, all the co-workers were nice. This one guy introduced himself, and then we had break together one day, he started asking if I had a boyfriend, why I was single and what type of guys I was into. I was vague with my answers, but still friendly enough. Its been about six months now, and today, during break he asked about my work schedule, you know normal chatty stuff, and asked what I do on my long days off, I said I babysat. He asked me if I knew one of our other co-workers kept this name out for privacy purposes and I said a little bit.. I thought he was gonna suggest I go out with this other worker lol, but he said "He says I should take out to dinner. Your the perfect woman for me Then a few weeks later, I was leaving work he was in the break room for lunch. But this is such a subtle game, that I had to explain it all! I appreciate your time regardless. B was seeing someone else at the time. We continued to hang out and every time he opens up more. He invited me and some friends to a BBQ his family was throwing.. They called me daughter by the end of that night! We went to an event together in which my ex was there. My ex has made it public he wants to get back together with me.. B and I would talk. After this event Mr. Two weeks after in another event, the same friend who pointed out his stares to me, asked him out of curiosity if there was something going on. She told me " He said nothing was going on, so casually it felt true" I thought he would stop calling or stop hanging out because people have been suspecting something is going on between us. If he truly felt nothing and if he was dating someone else then he would distance himself, right? He even took me to his house and lent me some DVDS! In fact this last week, we all went out and he taught me how to partner dance. We danced the night, he twirled me constantly, held on to me, encouraged me. Big time fan here. It started 1 year ago, at the time I was with my ex, and Mr. B all of the sudden wanted to hang out a lot. Now we know each other for about 7 years but as distant acquaintances. We both work in the same field, are both considered top of our field and have a ton of mutual friends. He invited me to his birthday to which I attended with my ex , and asked me to hang out a lot last year. He was warm to me, but oddly cold to my ex. We were both at a workshop teaching classes last November. A friend of mine came up to me and told me a curious observation about him. That he would follow me with his gaze everywhere. Now I thought she was kind of insane, because seriously.. Seriously he looks like Brad Pitt, he dates gorgeous models. Well anyways, I started paying attention and realizes he was staring at me always! I paid no real mind to it because I was trying to keep my old relationship together Sometimes I feared he would abuse me physically as well

Chapter 6 : 30 Ways to Say Great Job

I told him Early on before we got involved that it didn't seem like he and his wife had problems, and that I didn't want to be the one to break up his family.

You know that you bombed the interview if: Unfortunately we all can remember putting our foot in our mouths and blurting out some insanely personal story or flirting with the recruiter , ok well maybe not everyone flirts with the recruiter flirting with the recruiter is an automatic job offer: I mean so perfect that you wish it was recorded and could be submitted to the International Olympic Committee and then awarded a gold medal without actually doing anything athletic. This is to make sure that the target hire is actually the perfect candidate, which is not always the case but we are forced to hire them anyway. I Blame the Hiring Manager Hiring managers can be funny people to work with. Sometimes the power to hire whoever they want gets into their head. As a recruiter I need to find candidates that I think can do the job. Hiring managers sometimes want to hire their friends or family even though they are not qualified for the job. I understand the pressure to hire people you know but at the end of the day I need to be confident that the person I suggest and vote for will not be sitting in front of HR again discussing grounds for termination. Three ways to tell if you are not going to get the job: You Are Only Interviewed By The Recruiter If a manager is not present and you are only sitting face-to-face or on a phone interview with just the recruiter you are not going to get the job. This is because a manager makes the decision to hire not the recruiter. We are just the ones to find the right candidate. Listen to all the questions and really try your best. Just do your best and hope the recruiter thinks of you when another similar role comes up. During an interview you should always ask when they expect the interview process to be finished and when you should expect to hear from them. If the interview process will be completed by the end of one week i. Friday then you should hear from someone on Monday or Tuesday at the latest. Some recruiters will say that it might take awhile to offer a role and blame it on bureaucracy. If you were the successful candidate they would call or email you right away. This is because the recruiter wants to get the references started and hopefully get you to accept and provide notice to your current employer. Its really to get the ball rolling while paperwork is being completed. If you are the candidate they want you would be hearing from the recruiter right away. Simple recognition of effort can be a fantastic reward that provides continued motivation for future tasks. For truly exceptional work that exceeded expectations Excellent work must always be recognized and differentiated as such. High performers are intrinsically motivated by doing excellent work and producing something that impresses others. When that credit is not given, over time they will redirect their effort and contributions towards work that does meet that need for high achievement. This is truly above and beyond. We are thrilled to have you on our team and this is exactly why we need you. I had no idea a document could look this good. We are so fortunate to have an innovator like you on our team. This is so great I think others could benefit from learning about it. You set a high bar with this one. This showcases you are a role model and leader in our organization. For work completed fairly, accurately, and on time It is true that this is an expectation that comes with the jobâ€”to get work done without error and within deadline. This work still deserves appreciation and recognition, albeit at a more moderate level. Thanks for getting this done. You are a lifesaver. I appreciate you getting this to me so quickly so I have time to review it. Thanks for your help today. Thanks for your good work this week. Thanks for stepping up and getting this done for us. For a job well done Last but certainly not leastâ€”and in fact, most work will fall in this categoryâ€”is work that delivers more than the minimum but is not quite out of this world. Thanks, this is exactly what I was looking for. Wonderful, this is more than I expected. I appreciate your critical thinking around this project. Well doneâ€”and ahead of deadline too! You are such a team player. You are so creativeâ€”I always love getting your perspective on things. You consistently bring your all and I truly appreciate that. Positive feedback makes us feel recognized and appreciated , it identifies what we have done right and thus gives us a clue to what we should do more of , and it makes negative feedback and constructive criticism easier to accept and integrate. They do their chores when they arrive home. He does nothing all day. She does charity work when she has time. We did everything we could to help. I have done my homework. He has done a good job. The video will show you how it is done. The report was done on time. This replacement is more common in informal spoken English: Do I need to do my hair? Do you speak Arabic? You will see that we add DO at the beginning of the affirmative sentence to change it into a question. We use Do when the subject is I, you, we or they. Does he speak Arabic? When the subject is he, she or it, we add DOES at the beginning to make the affirmative sentence a question. Notice that the letter S at the end of the verb in the affirmative sentence because it is in third person disappears in the question. Do you like my shirt? Does he drive to work? Does she like hamburgers? Where do you live? Do they live in Spain? Did they live in Spain? The main verb live in the example above is in its base form of the infinitive. The auxiliary DID shows that the question is in the past tense. The only difference between a question in the present tense and a question in the past tense is the change in the auxiliary verb. Examples of DID in questions: Did you visit a museum while you were there? Did the bus arrive late? Did she like the surprise? Why did you say that? Notice that the letter S at the end of the verb in the affirmative sentence because it is in third person disappears in the negative sentence. This is for regular AND irregular verbs in English. The only difference between a negative sentence in the present tense and a negative sentence in the past tense is the change in the auxiliary verb. I do want to go. We put stress on the word DO to emphasize that we want to go You do need to take an umbrella. He does like spinach. You may be surprised but yes, he likes spinach I did study. Contrary to what you may believe Do can also appear at the beginning of an imperative sentence to emphasize the importance of that imperative verb. Do call when you arrive. Do tell him that I will be waiting for him.
