Springfield Armory The Springfield Armory , opened by George Washington in , was controversially closed in . Then as now, a major crossroads, during the s, George Washington selected a high bluff in Springfield as the site of the U. Washington selected Springfield for its centrality to important American cities and resources, its easy access to the Connecticut River and because, as today, the city served as the nexus for well-traveled roads. At that time, the arsenal stored muskets, cannons, and other weapons; it also produced paper cartridges. Barracks, shops, storehouses, and a magazine were built, but no arms were manufactured. After the war the government retained the facility to store arms for future needs. In , the Springfield Armory produced the first American-made musket, and during that year, produced muskets. Its presence also set Springfield on the path of industrial innovation that would result in the city becoming known as the "City of Progress" [27] [28] [29] and later as the "City of Firsts. Most of the buildings were erected during the 19th century, with the oldest dating from . It prompted George Washington to come out of retirement, and catalyzed the U. Founding Fathers to craft the U. They must be strengthened, there is no security of liberty or property. In January , Shays and the "Regulators" as they were then called, tried to seize the Arsenal at Springfield. The Arsenal at Springfield was not yet an Armory; however, it contained brass ordnance, howitzers , traveling carriages, muskets , swords , various military stores and implements, and many kinds of ammunition. In July , a diverse group of Western Massachusetts gentlemen, farmers, and war veterans – often characterized as " yeoman farmers" by the Massachusetts and Federal governments, convened in Southampton, Massachusetts , to write-up a list of grievances with the Massachusetts State Constitution. Samuel Adams wanted the Regulators "put to death immediately. The Congress authorized troops to put down the rebellion; however, the government insisted that it was for fighting Indians in Ohio. Arsenal at Springfield[edit] By January , thousands of men from Western Massachusetts, Eastern New York, Vermont, and Connecticut had joined the Regulators; however, many were scattered across the expanse of Western Massachusetts. On January 25, , three major Regulator armies were coalescing on Springfield in attempt to overtake the U. Federal Arsenal at Springfield. The armies were commanded by, respectively, Daniel Shays, whose army was camped in nearby Palmer, Massachusetts ; Luke Day, whose army was camped across the Connecticut River in West Springfield, Massachusetts ; and Eli Parsons, whose army was camped just north of Springfield in Chicopee, Massachusetts. The plan for commandeering the Arsenal at Springfield was for a three-pronged attack on January 25, ; however, the day before the scheduled attack, General Luke Day unilaterally postponed the attack to January 26, Day sent a note postponing the attack to both Shays and Parsons; however, it never reached them. General Shepard had requested permission from U. Secretary of Defense Henry Knox to use the weaponry in the Arsenal, because technically its firepower belonged to the United States, and not the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Shepard ordered a warning shot. Four of the Shaysites were killed, and thirty were immediately wounded. No musket fire took place. Without reinforcements from Day, the rebels were unsuccessful in taking the Springfield Arsenal. The militia captured many of the rebels on February 4 in Petersham, Massachusetts. Over the course of the next several weeks, the rebels were dispersed; however, skirmishes continued for approximately a year thereafter. Governor Bowdoin declared that Americans would descend into "a state of anarchy, confusion, and slavery" unless the rule of the law was upheld. Here Brown stands beside the flag of Subterranean Pass Way, [38] his militant counterpart to the Underground Railroad. Main Street in The City of Progress, circa . As of , Springfield is nicknamed The City of Firsts; however, throughout the 19th and early 20th centuries, its nickname was The City of Progress. For example, in , inventor Thomas Blanchard and his lathe led to the uses of interchangeable parts and assembly line mass production , which went on to influence the entire world – while originally making arms production at The

Springfield Armory faster and less expensive. In Springfield, "The City of Progress," many products were invented that are still popular and necessary today. For example, in 1839, Charles Goodyear perfected and patented vulcanized rubber at his factory in Springfield. The automobile had not yet been invented, so Goodyear patented his rubber stamp rather than tires, for which he later became known. In Massachusetts, the cruel institution was outlawed by the Supreme Court in a court decision based on the Massachusetts Constitution. In 1851, a man from New York "where slavery, at the time, was legal" came to Springfield demanding the return of his escaped slave: Jenny lived a free woman in Springfield thereafter. Nearly all Springfielders "from its wealthiest merchants to its influential newspaper publisher" supported abolitionism. In 1847, Brown moved into this progressive climate and set up a wool commission. Brown began attending church services at the traditionally black Sanford Street Church now St. Also, in Springfield, Brown met many of the contacts he would need in later years to fund his work in Bleeding Kansas. The League of Gileadites. Brown founded the group by saying, "Nothing so charms the American people as personal bravery. As of 1855, St. The partition of Chicopee from Springfield deprived Springfield of approximately half of its territory and approximately two-thirds of its population. To this day, the two cities of Springfield and Chicopee have relatively small land areas and remain separate. As of 1852, the MassMutual Life Insurance Company, headquartered in Springfield, is the second wealthiest company from Massachusetts listed in the Fortune By the s the endeavor had become the Springfield and New London Railroad. In 1848, Bowles was on the train to the Republican convention in Chicago where his friend, Springfield lawyer George Ashmun, was elected chairman of the convention that would eventually nominate Abraham Lincoln for president. Springfield Mass Waterfront On September 20, 1899, Springfielders Charles and Frank Duryea built and then road-tested the first-ever American, gasoline-powered car in Springfield. In 1899, the Duryea Motor Wagon Company became the first company to manufacture and sell gasoline-powered automobiles. Today, the city of Springfield is known worldwide as the birthplace of the sport of basketball. In 1891, James Naismith, a theology graduate, invented the sport of basketball at the YMCA International Training School "now known as Springfield College" to fill-in the gap between the football and baseball seasons. The first game of basketball ever played took place in the Mason Square district of Springfield. As of 1891, the exact spot where the first game took place is memorialized by an illuminated monument. In 1891, the first ever specifically crafted basketball was produced in Springfield by the Victor Sporting Goods Company. In 1891, it was replaced by a larger facility on the bank of the Connecticut River. In 1891, a new, architecturally significant Hall of Fame was constructed next to the existing site, which was subsequently converted into restaurants and an LA Fitness club. Shaped like a giant basketball and illuminated at night, the Basketball Hall of Fame is currently one of the most architecturally recognizable buildings recently constructed in Springfield. Many non-basketball-related events in Springfield also draw inspiration from the sport; for example, the annual Hoop City Jazz Festival brings jazz greats and tens of thousands of people to the "Hoop City. During the 19th and early 20th centuries, Springfield was known worldwide for its precision manufacturing and as "a beehive of diversified production. A publication notes that "Springfield has the most beautiful homes in New England. It has the most attractive streets in New England. It assembled nearly Silver Ghosts and Phantoms before production was halted by the Great Depression and the decision by Rolls Royce not to retool the plant. Granville Brothers Aircraft manufactured aircraft at Springfield Airport from until their bankruptcy in They are best known for the trophy and speed record holding Senior Sportster "GeeBee" series of racing aircraft. During this time, Springfield pioneered developments in mass media. During this period, then-U. Vice President Thomas R. Marshall, who served under U. President Woodrow Wilson, famously opined, "Here is a center from which thought emanates. What is said in Springfield is heard around the world. Much of the water damage was repaired after WPA money was made available to Springfield. However, two years later, high flood waters hit Springfield again. The standing flood waters were exacerbated by the New England Hurricane of 1938, which came up the east coast of the United States on September 21, 1938. During the s, I was constructed over the areas affected by the great floods. This decision effectively cut off the City of Springfield from the Connecticut River, its greatest natural resource. Springfield became increasingly like the
