Owen Burek Stuck with questions on application forms? Check out our huge list of example questions and answers. Why have you applied for this role? Here, you should match your skills and experience to the job description to demonstrate how suitable you are for the role. Avoid any answers that make reference to pay or benefits! During my time that I spent working with company X in the past I managed to pick up many key skills needed for this role too. What is your proudest achievement to date? Also, remember that your answer needs to be different to what your peers might say. My social and conversational skills also improved which allowed me to be much more effective in team working exercises. If you do have some gaps though, turn them into a positive. You might have learned about different cultures while travelling the world, or helped disadvantaged groups through volunteering. After graduating I was looking for a challenge and wanted to discover new cultures as well as improve my communication skills. I travelled around the world for 9 months in order to experience different cultures. Over the 9 months I had to be extremely creative as well as improve upon my organisational skills. Pick ones that demonstrate team working, initiative and communication skills. During my time at university I was part of a wide range of societies and clubs. For a period of 18 months I was part of the team that ran the music society and my role as events organiser meant that I had to be very precise so that everything ran smoothly. I was also part of the football team which allowed me to improve my team working as well as leadership skills. Tell us about a time when you did something as part of a team Use this question to give an example of the role that you typically take in a group situation. Do you lead, do you help to build positive relations, or do you drive the group towards the goal? Explain the situation, what happened during the task, and outline the overall outcome. The course that I completed at university had a strong emphasis on team based tasks. One example was when teams of 5 were tasked with presenting a new business proposal to our peers via a 30 minute presentation. From the offset nobody wanted to take the lead and I was happy to have that responsibility. I assigned tasks, set meeting times and overlooked the whole project to ensure that everyone pitched in. So, perhaps you had a part-time job in which you were responsible for delivering a presentation to new members of staff about the business. You might have made sure that you used no company jargon, and sought to identify the issues that would be most important to them. When working part time for the educational charity X, I was tasked with compiling a presentation on my university experience to a group on year 9 students. With my audience in mind I made sure to keep academic jargon out of the presentation as well as adding humour to keep the audience captivated throughout. Tell us about a time when you took responsibility for managing a project or activity This is your chance to show off your leadership skills! Talk through the situation, including any setbacks that you came across and how they were overcome, then outline the outcome. In my previous role at company X we had a short period when my line manager was on annual leave. During that time I was made the team leader. The proposal was overdue but I was keen to get it right the first time rather than rushing through an unfinished project. Tell us about a time when you had to deal with a difficult customer Think about a time when you managed to turn a negative situation into a positive one. So, maybe you dealt with a customer complaint in your part-time job, but ensured that the customer left with an excellent and renewed impression of the business. When working in John Lewis there was once a customer who was not happy that a certain hoodie was not in their size. The gentleman was shouting and swearing and among this I made sure that I remained calm, polite and helpful. I was aware that he was angry at the situation as opposed to me myself, although I did not tell him that. The issue was resolved as I calmly explained that we could order one into the store for him to pick up. Tell us about your most challenging work experience This one is a great opportunity to show off your strengths, alongside some concrete examples. Briefly explain your role, identify what it was that made it so challenging, and make it clear what skills you developed along the way. What did you do about it? During my third year at university I failed to meet the deadline for an online test. I had underestimated the time that it would take to complete which meant that I submitted an unfinished test and lost important grades. I learned that in future I should allow more flex time to complete tasks. Tell us about a time when you had to communicate complex information Again, this communication question is all about showing that you recognise your audience and can find simple yet effective ways to get your message across. Mention why it was important, how you ensured everyone understood, and what the result was. The information was complex and at times a little dry. What are your strengths? I am extremely computer literate and this has been shown by my ability to build a website as an online portfolio for myself. The website has opened up opportunities as well as allowed me to hone my skills. What are your weaknesses? Be honest, but turn your answer into a positive. Public speaking is not my strongest skill. However, during university I joined the debating society in order to improve speaking to large crowds. As time goes on I hope to work hard to turn it into one of my strengths. At my first ever job I realised that the company were not taking on the full benefit of social media due to the manager not fully understanding it. I took it upon myself to write a full proposal in my spare time highlighting the benefits of social media. Though these questions are the ones that are most likely to pop up, be prepared for a few unexpected ones. How did you tackle it? Last updated 5th July, What others are reading.
