

Chapter 1 : Italian Jubilation | Learning Journeys

Journey to Jubilation As with any Girl Scout trip or event, preparation is as important as the event itself - for both the adults and the girls. Working in partnership with your girls during any trip or event preparation offers a fantastic opportunity for skill-building, confidence-building, and leadership development.

AJV Obinna, who has become a field marshal in the anti-osu movement. His Royal Highness, Eze E. That impression would later elicit the anti-osu revolution that culminated into the historic abolition of this obnoxious practice on July 14, Do you not realize that Sunday is here? Now, the humility with which he surrendered and gave up the function to Sunday shook me to my bones. So when I became the king on December 28, , I made up my mind to deal with this problem. Today, the rest is history. The journey that got us here has been succinctly captured in a tell-all book titled The Osu Caste System: Isaac, who flew in from the United States of America to witness history in his home town, was almost in tears. Another Abuja based politician and highly revered elder in Irete, C. He boasted that his daughters were in full agreement! Popular Nollywood actor, Joseph Okechukwu, who had been at the forefront of the campaign to summarily abolish the Caste Systems in all Igbo Speaking areas of Nigeria and beyond, was live at the epochal event. I had been following the development and praying that nothing would stop July 14th from coming to pass, and nothing did, it happened. The journey to the freedom of the Igbo nation in Nigeria begins. We want it abolished everywhere in our land. In Nigeria, Igbos are like people in a giant prison. And this nonsense is the reason for our imprisonment. God told me that and I made a video about it. He promised that the December event to abolish the Osu Caste System in Igbo land will be much bigger and all encompassing, and will see prominent Igbo sons and daughters, home and abroad grace the occasion. African-Americans or foreign nationals who identify as Igbo by ancestry will also be invited to the big event in which forgiveness for slavery and casting shall be sort from God by elders of the Igbo nation in Nigeria.

There has been no easy way around it. Yet on the other hand, 7 days following my biggest career achievement I found myself on the roadside of the Ironman. More so tell a story that covers the events that lead to my withdrawal from the Ironman. Insight into my mind I train to become a recognized champion, a champion of the world. This is my pursuit in life at the moment, my drive day-in day-out. It is a pursuit that will not last forever, I know that, we all know that, but it is a pursuit I will remain on whilst I continue to get faster and stronger. I know what I want from the sport and I know what it takes to get there. I may never get there but I want to leave this sport knowing I committed everything I could to get there. In summary this is who I am. Like all championship events it required that I swam, biked and ran faster than I had done before in order to win. I focused my training on what it would take to contend for the win at Mont-Tremblant. That preparation, that work and that commitment put my body and mind in a position where-by, yes I won Hy-Vee but more so I was ready to contend for the win at Mont-Tremblant. Yet Hy-Vee was always part of the process towards hitting championship ready form in Mont-Tremblant. Four out of the five Ironman. That includes the three victories. My withdrawal from the Life Time Tri Series was a decision to protect my pursuit towards the Ironman. It was racing at its best. All out, full gas, honest, fair and competitive. The depth is always something that makes a championship race competitive but beyond that the race was fast and intense. A look at my TrainingPeaks file from the bike tells the story of how honest and true Hy-Vee was. Yet in the grand scheme of things Mont-Tremblant meant more to me. Not the day of Hy-Vee, not the day of Racine. I wanted to challenge for the world title and I knew I could. We applied them as part of the approach. I learnt from my races and used them as stepping-stones. I had observed and monitored the type of racing standard I needed to bring to Mont-Tremblant to challenge for the win. I brought the best I had. Hy-Vee showed me that I could race Mont-Tremblant the way I knew it needed to be raced to contend for the win. I needed a swim similar to that of Hy-Vee, whether alone or with people, realistically with people. There needed to be splits and the bike needed to set a standard that would likely not have been seen in the sport before. All of which became a reality, until 57km into the bike. The swim went as expected, potentially could have been a little quicker but it caused big gaps behind. These girls not only have experience but they have incredible speed, stamina more-so grit to make the human body suffer. From the moment we exited T1 it was ON! Without the need to communicate we all knew that we had an opportunity. If I could of come to the front of the race and contributed to the high pace I would of done so. More strikingly the race was honest, all within that leading 5 group were on the limit, with such a high pace set out front it was difficult for me to do anything other than ensure the gap grew no bigger than 12 meters. It was something of reassurance that throughout almost the entire bike ride we had a drafting moto following us. We are professionals we want a fair, honest and clean race. When a drafting moto follows it allows for communication to ensure the 12 meters is being held. Even eye contact from time to time makes them aware that you want to legitimately ride within the rules. This was the theme throughout the entire bike ride. Honest and true racing. At around 57km after one of the toughest surges I have ever been involved in, the Daniela Ryf attack, I seemingly lapsed in concentration. I was, in that instance shown a red card, no warning, no discretion just a straight red meaning a 4 minute drafting violation. In that very moment I felt as though my world had ended. More so I felt cheated, hard done by, distraught, emotional, disappointed, so many emotions flooded my body and I simply could not for the life of me comprehend what had just happened. It was not in the nature of how the race was developing, at least not for us front women. From that moment forward I spent my time asking the unanswerable question, why? My foot came off the gas. My mind entered a spiral that was filled with irrational thoughts and pure emotion. A 4-minute drafting penalty indicates actions of a racer I am not. None of them deserve that. Emotionally I was simply overwhelmed and by that point the emotion of the moment had gone too far, destroying any chances of me pulling through this. I had put all I had into this one-day; executing a race I was capable of. Yet an external, uncontrollable factor determined that I was gaining an unfair advantage worthy of a drafting violation. It was a scenario I had not planned for. It crippled me in a way that I was unable to overcome it. Ben provided me with some glimpse of hope that I could salvage something. That hope lasted about 5km, I was just not running, or at least that is how it felt. I could not contain focus on the situation, instead continuing to question my presence in the race, asking the unanswerable question of why? To many people choosing to DNF will be seen as an easy option. It was one of the toughest calls I have made in my career. Post Mont-Tremblant the support and camaraderie between professionals has really shone through. I have been touched by the messages of support and compassion from fellow professionals. Those inside that leading five, those just outside it and those in another part of the race, but all seemingly understanding, have expressed sadness and compassion on my behalf and it is extremely comforting. I do feel however I owe you an apology, withdrawing, in some ways is disrespectful to all the hard work and dedication you put in to achieve the same things as I do.
