This is a list of zoos in racedaydvl.com a list of aquaria, see List of aquaria in India.. Zoos are primarily dry facilities where animals are confined within enclosures and displayed to the public, and in which they may also be bred.

Arignar Anna Zoological Park Mysore Zoo Located near the palace in Mysore, the zoo is one of the oldest and most popular zoos in India. With species and counting, it covers around acres of land. The Mysore Zoo is famed for its elephants, a total of ten are currently calling the zoo home, while 24 others have done so at some point in their mortal lives. More than animals call the zoo home, with a total different species of fauna. Although the zoo has had its fair share of controversies regarding safety of civilians from the dangerous animals, it is one of the most beloved attraction sites in Delhi, dating back to when it was first inaugurated as a park. Its conservation breeding program helps keep species from extinction, supplying other zoos with offspring for continued conservation efforts. The government saw it necessary to create a zoo inside the Allen Natural Forest. Located just five minutes from the city center, the forest zoo features ancient evergreen trees, a lake and is also the largest botanical zoo in the whole of Asia. The zoo is home to rhinos, tigers, fish, dinosaur sculptures, and a night house for nocturnal animals. It is a great place for picnics and nature walks, and a soon to be built toy train. It has been earmarked for creation of natural habitats for its animals, as part of an elaborate conservation scheme by the Government.

Sakkarbaug Zoological Garden Sitting on a vast acre land in Gujarat, India, the Sakkarbaug is the third largest zoo in the world, and the oldest in India. It is home to over mammals and nearly birds of a variety of species, all enclosed in houses all over the zoo. It is famed for its conservation efforts, being able to provide purebred Asiatic lions to conservation and breeding programs in Asia and some countries all over the world. It is also the only zoo in India to play host to African Cheetahs which they sought from a zoo in Singapore, trading three lions for two sets of cheetahs. It covers an estimated acres, and is home to over species of animals and birds. Species living there include lions, tigers, elephants, panthers and lots of birds. The park also features a butterfly park, a tortoise house and a dino park. More than animals and birds call the zoo their habitat, in lieu of species of birds and animals sourced from the world over. The zoo has since grown in both areas of cover and species count. It is now known as the Assam State Zoo cum Botanical Garden, owing to the addition of a museum and a botanical garden. The Animal Adoption Scheme was launched in as a fundraising scheme to help maintain the zoo and fund the conservation program.

Nandankanan Zoological Park Sitting on a acre piece of land in Bhubaneswar, Odisha, India, the Nandankanan Zoological park is one of the most closely guarded treasures in India. It also has a botanical segment aside the animal park, and was declared a Nandankanan Sanctuary, or the Garden of the Heavens. It receives more than 2 million visitors annually. It is home to the white tigers, one of the worlds most endangered species. Its 34 aquaria are home to thousands of fresh water fish. Tortoises, lizards, snakes and turtles make up the reptile park. The park has an Adopt an Animal campaign that seeks to raise funds for the running and maintenance of the park, while also supporting their conservation of endangered species program.

Alipore Zoological Gardens The Alipore Zoological Gardens are one of the oldest zoos in India dating back to and is located in east of Kolkata, in Bengal India, sitting on a acre piece of land. In December alone, visitors totalled an impressive 81, with most of them visiting during the winter season. The zoo started off as a private menagerie for the then Governor General of India, Richard Wellesley. The species count is not clearly documented but animals such as giraffes, rhinos, Indian elephants, zebras, and birds such as macaw, hornbills, turacos, ostriches and the highly endangered conures species make up the fauna of the zoo.

Sanjay Gandhi Botanical and Zoological Garden This botanical and zoological garden was first established as a botanical garden back in It is now home to over animals representing species. If you happen to visit the park, animals such as tigers, leopards, giraffes, hippos, crocodiles, elephants, the black bear, the jackal and black bucks await you. The fauna part of the zoo has more than different species, mostly trees and shrubs, and is also home to 35 different types of fish. It is famed for its conservation efforts, being able to successfully breed endangered rhinos, hippos, alligators and porcupines.

Arignar Anna Zoological Park The first public zoo in India covers over acres of land that includes a acre rehabilitation and rescue center. It was officially declared the largest zoological park in India, housing over species of wildlife, and species of plant, trees, bushes and thicket. It is also a haven for 46 endangered species. It is also an acknowledged sanctuary park, coming second after the Mudumalai National Park in Tamil Nadu. The zoo is popular since visitors will see most of the species in their natural habitats instead of artificial enclosures. The zoo also features a butterfly house, a reptile house, an Amphibian house, a crocodile enclosure, an Aquarium and a primate house. India has been famed for its conservation efforts, simply put; they know how to take care of their animals. Most of these zoos are favorite destinations for animal lovers in Asia. Celebrities have flocked the zoos with animal adoption programs, and for a good reason. The zoos only need financial support to get the ball rolling.

List of Zoos, Caves, Beaches in India PDF (%) 42 votes In India there are several tourist places to visit, particularly the Zoological Parks and Beaches are famous among them.

Here are seven of the most amazing ones. Know all about the rare species, interesting facts about them and where they can be found. India is a peerless abode of wonderful and exotic animals. The country harbours a charismatic mixture of wildlife species. There are more than wildlife sanctuaries and national parks which give shelter to an enormous number of endangered and wild animals. The country is blessed with diverse and unique creatures although, due to harsh human interference, many of the animals are on the verge of extinction. The lush green jungles of India harbour many types of species. The animal can be found in India and Nepal, particularly in the foothills of the Himalayas. Poaching of horns is an important reason for the decline in the number of the Indian Rhinoceros. There has been a dramatic increase in the numbers of Greater One-Horned Rhinoceros since , but there is a consistent threat due to an increase in hunting cases. More efforts should be undertaken for the conservation of the Greater One-Horned Rhinoceros. Places where Greater One-Horned Rhinoceros can be spotted: The white rhino is the largest rhino species and the largest land mammal after the elephant. During the Mughal Era, the rulers used to use Greater One-horned Rhino in fights against elephants as entertainment. The rhinos would often win. Thankfully, this sport is no longer practiced or permitted. Nilgiri Tahr The Nilgiri tahr is a threatened mountain ungulate clinging on to the tropical rainforest of the Western Ghats. Thanks to continuous poaching activities and Eucalyptus cultivation hampering its habitat, the Nilgiri Tahr population is continuously decreasing. Places where Nilgiri tahr can be spotted: The natural habitat of tigers in India is tropical evergreen forests, deciduous forests, mangrove swamps, thorn forests and grass jungles has almost disappeared outside the reserves. Altogether, there are 48 tiger reserves in India. But one place that has captured the fancy of major wildlife aficionados is the Jim Corbett National Park. There are currently 2, tigers left in India. Places where Royal Bengal Tigers can be spotted: A tiger roar can be heard more than a mile away 4. The King of the Jungle reigns supreme in India. Only or so Asiatic lions exist in the wild. Places where Asiatic Lion can be spotted: Black Buck Blackbucks, the Indian antelopes, are found in abundance in the plains, grasslands and scrubs of India. Activities like hunting, poaching, habitat destruction, overgrazing and inbreeding has led to a drastic downward fluctuation in the blackbuck population. Another reason why the blackbuck population is immensely decreasing is the large-scale conversion of their habitats into agriculture fields and poaching. Other than India, Blackbuck can be found in Nepal and Pakistan. Places where Black Buck can be spotted: The Lion Tailed Macaque can be found in the tiny, isolated pockets of the tropical forest in the Western Ghats. With only 2, species in zoo and wildlife reserves, the Lion Tailed Macaque is one of the most endangered animals in the world. The silent feature of the macaque and its appearance are its outstanding characteristics. The Lion Tailed Macaque is an old world monkey and is one of the 16 macaque species. Places where Lion Tailed Macaque can be spotted: The Lion-tailed Macaque is so well adapted to its forest home that it simply cannot adjust to the new habitats being created by human intrusion. Snow Leopard Profoundly found in the steep and rocky region of the Himalayas, the snow leopard is the descendant of the wild cat and panther families. Snow leopards have thick, long fur, and their skin color varies from yellowing tan to smoky gray. The Snow leopard can be easily identified by its tail as it is cm long. There are 6, snow leopards in the world, but its population is gradually declining. In addition, snow leopards are illegally hunted in the fur trade for making luxury coats and their bones are sought after for traditional Asian medicine. Places where Snow Leopard can be spotted: Snow leopard cubs are born blind. Mentioned above are some of the most incredible animals that we might never see again until and unless some serious action takes place. These seven species are vital for the maintenance of the ecological balance, as they play a key role in the food cycle. Extinction of these species will ultimately cause a big loss for humans. Or have something to share? Anjali Wadhwa is a wildlife aficionado, wanderer, devourer of books, daydreamer and traveler who want to explore the unified jungles of India. You will see her amazing command over flora and fauna through her blogs and articles.
