Overview[edit] In the first part of the autobiography, Mandela describes his upbringing as a child and adolescent in South Africa, and being connected to the royal Thembu dynasty. His childhood name was Rolihlahla, which is loosely translated as "pulling the branch of a tree", or a euphemism for "troublemaker". Mandela describes his education at a Thembu college called Clarkebury, and later at the strict Healdtown school, where students were rigorously put in routines. He mentions his education at the University of Fort Hare , and his practice of law later on. He also then writes; "Democracy meant all men to be heard, and decision was taken together as a people. Majority rule was a foreign notion. A minority was not to be clashed by a majority. Mandela joined the African National Congress in and describes his organisation of guerrilla tactics and underground organisations to battle against apartheid. In , Mandela was convicted for inciting people to strike and leaving the country without a passport and sentenced to five years imprisonment. However, Mandela was shortly thereafter sentenced to life imprisonment for sabotage in what was known as the " Rivonia Trial ", by Justice Dr. Quartus de Wet , instead of a possible death sentence. His year tenure in prison was marked by the cruelty of Afrikaner guards, backbreaking labour, and sleeping in minuscule cells which were nearly uninhabitable. Unlike his biographer Anthony Sampson , Mandela does not accuse the warder James Gregory of fabricating a friendship with his prisoner. Mandela considered suing Gregory for this breach of trust. Mandela became the President of South Africa in Reviews[edit] The book won the Alan Paton Award in , and has been published in numerous languages, including an Afrikaans translation by Antjie Krog. Film adaptation[edit] Long Walk to Freedom has been adapted into a film titled Mandela: Full release happened on Christmas Day in the United States. Ghost writer and second memoir[edit] In an obituary of Mandela, The Times of London reported that the latter chapters of Long Walk to Freedom had been "ghosted by a skilful US journalist", and that Mandela had later started work on a second set of memoirs without a ghost writer. The Presidential Years , this volume took its title from the closing sentence of Long Walk to Freedom:
