Trouble is my business. A rich man hired Marlowe to keep his good-for-nothing son from getting married to a woman whose sole interest in him was his money. This happens to be the first appearance of famous PI who is slightly rough around the edges and really likes to say the title phrase. Several dead bo Review updated on Several dead bodies, corrupt policemen, organized crime bossed and their thugs keep things from getting slowing down. Marlowe was the only witness to a murder committed by a henchman of a high-ranked politician; we all know such witnesses develop terminal illnesses really fast. Marlowe not only needed to stay alive, but also to protect a client who tried to cheat a mafia boss out of his money; the life expectancy of such people is even less than that of inconvenient witnesses. This relatively short story tightly packed with loads and loads of dead bodies. An old case of stolen pearls which had been never recovered suddenly made comeback with Marlowe being initially very skeptical about the whole deal, but the first dead body convinced him to follow the lead. This is probably the only Philip Marlowe story with a decent pay off I mean monetary reward at the end. Trouble followed Marlowe even when he sits in an empty bar drinking and minding his own business. A man who was looking for a woman got killed right in front of his eyes and now he once again needed to stay alive long enough to find the woman the dead man described in hope of getting some answers. It also happened to be very good and memorable. Raymond Chandler wrote a foreword for this collection. He mentioned that he created these stories for publishing in crime journals, most notably in "Black Mask". As such, there were certain constraints he had to write them within - both in terms of plot development and style. He could rewrite them after he hit big as a writer, but it turned out to be impossible without completely destroying them. My opinion on this is that a real talent always shows even when the author does not have a complete freedom in writing. As such the collection deserves 4. This is a must read for Philip Marlowe fans.

Philip has brown eyes that are warm and flecked with gold. Philip is just over six feet tall and weighs about one hundred and ninety five pounds. He lives in an apartment complex called the Berglund on the fourth floor. Philip is a decent man, who lives by a code that is fair and mostly honest. Trouble is his business, although he is often so surrounded by it, that he prefers not to use the tag line as much as he once did. In the course of this novel, Philip is shot, punched, followed, and lied to. He often finds himself doing the job of the police for them, despite their lack of respect for him. He is tough and competent, intelligent and resourceful. Harriet Huntress appears in Trouble Is My Business Harriet Huntress is a red-headed woman with what some would refer to as bedroom eyes. She acts as a shill for a gambler and Philip Marlowe has been hired to deal with her. Harriet lives in the nineteen hundred block of North Sycamore in the El Milano. Harriet has eyes that are the same kind of blue as a lapis-lazuli. They are wide set and intelligent. She has dusky red hair and her make up is applied with skill. She is just a little too tall to be considered cute and smokes using a three-inch mouth piece. Harriet and her family were once in the Social Register and Jeeter had ruined them to such a degree that her father committed suicide. Jeeter is a wealthy man who hires Anna Halsey to help him discourage a shill named Harriet Huntress who has managed to get her hooks into his adopted son. He is a tall man with white blond hair. His face is keen and sharp, although his eyes have small pouches under them and his lips are a little on the thick side for the rest of his face. He is well dressed, carrying a thin, platinum octagonal watch, sporting a pink rosebud in his lapel, and carrying a cane made of ebony with a silver knob on top. His shoes are spats and his age looks to be around sixty. He is described by those who work for him as a man so tight his head squeaks when his hat is removed. Jeeter owns an assortment of investment companies. She is a middle-aged woman who has eyes that are as black as buttons and a soft, ruddy complexion. When more is required from her, she farms out the work she requires to those more suited to field work. She smokes cigarettes in a long, black holder. Arbogast appears in Trouble Is My Business Arbogast is the expert who was hired by Anna Halsey to authenticate a selection of photostats taken of fifty thousand dollars worth of notes that Mr. John is incredibly overweight. Even larger than Anna Halsey, John has a face that resembles a pink basketball. He has gray hair that is cut short and his dark suit is in need of a cleaning. His neck is a series of folds and his small feet are tucked into shiny black shoes. While not known for violence, Marty has a reputation for being a bit of a tough guy. Marty is tall, has dark hair and has a dangerous, but suave air about him. Marty holds a five thousand dollar gambling note against Jeeter junior. She has blond hair, and is a tall woman. He plays a reasonable game of golf and thinks he is a gift to womankind everywhere. Junior comes into a substantial amount of money - five million dollars - once he turns twenty eight and his estate comes out of trust. Until then, he lives on an allowance of one thousand dollars a month. His feet are small and he wears dirty white sneakers, looking somewhat like a terrier. His gun looks too big and he smells of menthol. He breathes noisily through his mouth. His face is wedge shaped and pointed at the end the same way an ace of spades looks at the bottom. His eyes are dark and his nose is unusually white. He carries a Colt Woodsman that has the sight filed off making the barrel look even longer, confident of his ability to shoot accurately. Waxnose allows Frisky to hang around with him, helping to keep him safe by controlling his actions. He is tall, and broad shouldered with wavy, dark brown hair and eyebrows. His teeth are clean and white and his eyes are black and glitter with intelligence. George is college educated, having attended Dartmouth, having paid for his education with three square meals and a uniform. He is an excellent marksman, and describes himself as a man who takes chances. George smokes, and wears a peaked cap with a Russian tunic and Sam Browne belt. He is older than Sebold, and looks like the kind of policeman who has failed to advance. Together they question Philip Marlowe about the death of Frisky Lavon. Ben is less than patient during this questioning, partially because his wife left him two days earlier. Fenweather appears in Finger Man Fenweather is a district attorney who looks the part. He has gray temples - the kind that appeal to women, and his features are chiseled and severe. Frank Dorr appears in Finger Man Frank is large in the political scene. He is often referred to as a fixer - the man you would need to see if you had any desire to run girls, gambling, or even just sell honest goods in the city. He is such a large man that he waddles when he walks. He has a fat face and just a fringe of white hair that sticks up in places. He has small, sharp eyes and his hands are small and delicate. He is partial to a large black Persian cat named Toby that he refers to as his only girlfriend. Bernie is of medium size, and has white eyebrows. He is a bland man with a deeply cleft and out thrust chin. Bernie smokes small cigars. Harger appears in Finger Man Lou is a very good looking young man with red, full lips, dark hair and eyebrows. His skin is olive and clear. Lou has a way to regain some of the money he lost. He discovers that Canales has purchased one of his old roulette wheels - a wheel he knows well, and can beat. His plan is to play, and take Canales for as much as he can, but he needs Marlowe to watch his back. The plan works and he and his lady friend manage to win almost twenty two thousand dollars, but Lou will never be able to spend it. He is found dead, shot once in the chest, the next morning. Art was shot full of lead and then pushed out of a car by Manny who cut the ropes on wrists before leaving. Art was a straight shooter who kept the Board in line and without him, the grafters would have a much easier time of things. Miss Glenn appears in Finger Man A tall red headed girl, she is not quite described as beautiful, but definitely more than just pretty. She looks to be about thirty years old. Canales appears in Finger Man Canales is a slight and pale looking man who has black hair that is straight and lusterless. His forehead is high and bony, and his eyes flat and impenetrable. He has a thin mustache trimmed in two even lines that come down below his mouth by an inch. His overall appearance is a combination of Oriental and Negroid. He walks with economy of motion, and his feet turned outward a fair distance, increase his Negroid appearance. Kathy Horne appears in Goldfish Kathy is a former policewoman who is now a seedy looking, sad eyed blond. Kathy is a tall woman with china blue eyes who made the mistake of marrying a check bouncer named Johnny, thinking she would be able to reform him. Now, she works at the Mansion House, manning the cigar counter. She has a soft heart. Sol Leander appears in Goldfish Sol is a lumberman from the north who purchased a pair of pearls for his wife worth two hundred thousand dollars. They are subsequently stolen from a mail truck and now have a twenty five thousand dollar reward attached to them. Wally Sype appears in Goldfish Wally is a thief who was caught after robbing a mail truck and shooting the driver nineteen years earlier. He spent fifteen years in Leavenworth before being offered parole if he would return the goods he stole. He returns everything but the Leander pearls, claiming they were never part of his heist, and the parole board believes him and sets him free. One time, in all the years he was in jail, he drank too much and told his cell mate that he buried the pearls in Idaho. Wally is married to Hattie and now lives in Westport, trying to put the past behind him. He talks in his sleep and when Kathy questioned him, he admitted to being an ex-con and to the inside information gleaned from Wally when they shared a cell. He claims to know where Sype is. Peeler is a small man, standing only five foot four inches in height. He has brown, thin hair and his ears look larger than they should be. Rush Madder appears in Goldfish Rush is best described as an ambulance chaser. Rush is thick set man, fifty years of age, with an oily complexion and a round, soft chin. He is about five feet nine inches tall and weighs about a hundred and eighty pounds. He has heavy, black eyebrows and a mustache like Charlie Chan - the latter making his face look even fatter than it already was.

To obtain the best possible education for Ray, his mother, originally from Ireland, moved them to the area of Upper Norwood in the London Borough of Croydon [6] in Chandler was classically educated at Dulwich College , London a public school whose alumni include the authors P. Wodehouse [8] and C. In , he was naturalized as a British subject in order to take the civil service examination, which he passed. He then took an Admiralty job, lasting just over a year. His first poem was published during that time. Chandler disliked the servility of the civil service and resigned, to the consternation of his family, and became a reporter for the Daily Express and the Bristol Western Gazette newspapers. He was unsuccessful as a journalist, but he published reviews and continued writing romantic poetry. An encounter with the slightly older Richard Barham Middleton is said to have influenced him into postponing his career as writer. Shortly afterwards he committed suicide in Antwerp, a suicide of despair, I should say. Nor was I at all a happy young man. His mother joined him there in late They moved to Los Angeles in , [11] where he strung tennis rackets, picked fruit and endured a time of scrimping and saving. He found steady employment with the Los Angeles Creamery. He saw combat in the trenches in France with the Gordon Highlanders , was twice hospitalized with Spanish flu during the pandemic [12] and was undergoing flight training in the fledgling Royal Air Force RAF when the war ended. For the next four years Chandler supported both his mother and Cissy. After the death of Florence Chandler on September 26, , he was free to marry Cissy. They were married on February 6, As a writer[ edit ] This section needs additional citations for verification. Please help improve this article by adding citations to reliable sources. Unsourced material may be challenged and removed. March Learn how and when to remove this template message In straitened financial circumstances during the Great Depression , Chandler turned to his latent writing talent to earn a living, teaching himself to write pulp fiction by studying the Perry Mason stories of Erle Stanley Gardner. His first novel, The Big Sleep , was published in , featuring the detective Philip Marlowe, speaking in the first person. In , Chandler described in a letter to his English publisher, Hamish Hamilton, why he began reading pulp magazines and later wrote for them: This was in the great days of the Black Mask if I may call them great days and it struck me that some of the writing was pretty forceful and honest, even though it had its crude aspect. I decided that this might be a good way to try to learn to write fiction and get paid a small amount of money at the same time. After that I never looked back, although I had a good many uneasy periods looking forward. Literary success and film adaptations led to a demand for Chandler himself as a screenwriter. The noir screenplay was nominated for an Academy Award. Said Wilder, "I would just guide the structure and I would also do a lot of the dialogue, and he Chandler would then comprehend and start constructing too. He had not written a denouement for the script and, according to producer John Houseman , Chandler agreed to complete the script only if drunk, which Houseman agreed to. Chandler clashed with Hitchcock to such an extent that they stopped talking, especially after Hitchcock heard Chandler had referred to him as "that fat bastard". The latter was derived from an unproduced courtroom drama screenplay he had written for Universal Studios. Four chapters of a novel, unfinished at his death, were transformed into a final Philip Marlowe novel, Poodle Springs , by the mystery writer and Chandler admirer Robert B. Parker , in Parker shares the authorship with Chandler. Parker subsequently wrote a sequel to The Big Sleep entitled Perchance to Dream , which was salted with quotes from the original novel. In , "The Princess and the Pedlar" , a previously unknown comic operetta, with libretto by Chandler and music by Julian Pascal, was discovered [15] among the uncatalogued holdings of the Library of Congress. The work was never published or produced. It has been dismissed by the Raymond Chandler estate as "no more than a curiosity. Later life and death[ edit ] Cissy Chandler died in , after a long illness. Heartbroken and drunk, Chandler neglected to inter her cremated remains, and they sat for 57 years in a storage locker in the basement of Cypress View Mausoleum. In The Long Embrace: Raymond Chandler and the Woman He Loved, Judith Freeman says it was "a cry for help," given that he called the police beforehand, saying he planned to kill himself. Chandler regained his U. After a respite in England, he returned to La Jolla. He died at Scripps Memorial Hospital of pneumonial peripheral vascular shock and prerenal uremia according to the death certificate in Instead, he was buried in Mount Hope, because he had left no funeral or burial instructions. The shared gravestone reads, "Dead men are heavier than broken hearts", a quotation from The Big Sleep. Views on pulp fiction[ edit ] In his introduction to Trouble Is My Business , a collection of four of his short stories, Chandler provided insight on the formula for the detective story and how the pulp magazines differed from previous detective stories: The emotional basis of the standard detective story was and had always been that murder will out and justice will be done. Its technical basis was the relative insignificance of everything except the final denouement. What led up to that was more or less passage work. The denouement would justify everything. The technical basis of the Black Mask type of story on the other hand was that the scene outranked the plot, in the sense that a good plot was one which made good scenes. The ideal mystery was one you would read if the end was missing. We who tried to write it had the same point of view as the film makers. He was wrong, but only because he was thinking of the wrong kind of mystery. Chandler also described the struggle that writers of pulp fiction had in following the formula demanded by the editors of the pulp magazines: As I look back on my stories it would be absurd if I did not wish they had been better. But if they had been much better they would not have been published. If the formula had been a little less rigid, more of the writing of that time might have survived. Some of us tried pretty hard to break out of the formula, but we usually got caught and sent back. To exceed the limits of a formula without destroying it is the dream of every magazine writer who is not a hopeless hack. Yet the detective Philip Marlowe is not a stereotypical tough guy, but a complex, sometimes sentimental man with few friends, who attended university, who speaks some Spanish and sometimes admires Mexicans, and who is a student of chess and classical music. The high regard in which Chandler is generally held today is in contrast to the critical sniping that stung the author during his lifetime. In a March letter to Blanche Knopf, published in Selected Letters of Raymond Chandler, he wrote, "The thing that rather gets me down is that when I write something that is tough and fast and full of mayhem and murder, I get panned for being tough and fast and full of mayhem and murder, and then when I try to tone down a bit and develop the mental and emotional side of a situation, I get panned for leaving out what I was panned for putting in the first time. Playback is the only one of his novels not to have been cinematically adapted. William Faulkner was a co-writer of the screenplay. Chandler was also a perceptive critic of detective fiction; his essay " The Simple Art of Murder " is the canonical essay in the field.

Shadows, murder, betrayal, bizarre wealthy families, and snappy dialogue are all lovingly recreated down to the last detail. Konkle funded the film, as least partially, from Kickstarter and brought the noir genre back to life for one spirited feature. It is polished and stylistically complete, amazingly so given the budget. In which private detective Roland Drake falls for two sisters from the Montemar family. He winds up in bed with both of them. One woman dies, the other wants to kill him. The shades of light and shadow onscreen are right on the money. Cinematography is beautiful, with the help of some obvious but not distracting CGI including beautiful digital ray traced images of vintage cars, streets, and skylines. Some of the traveling scenes play like Sin City. He should have found someone else for the lead. What is it about Bogart? He was flawed, not at all a pretty man, but commanded the screen like few other actors. It is, perhaps, unfair to fault Konkle for not being Bogart, as no one is, but the film has a Bogart-shaped hole right in the middle of each frame. Brittney Powell nails her performance and the supporting cast are exactly right. Vernon Wells, best known for playing the mohawk sporting biker Wez in The Road Warrior, is 72 now and chews the scenery as a corrupt cop with a satisfying balance of craggy faced menace and evil glee. The film is in no hurry, it moves like a noir film did, which feels a little slow for a modern audience. At just shy of minutes, it also runs long. A 90 minute cut would have been perfect. The Thin Man runs 93 minutes, the Maltese Falcon Those classics are good timing benchmarks. Trouble is My Business, and business is pretty damn good. Trouble is My Business Directed by Tom Konkle. Written by Tom Konkle, Brittney Powell. Thanks for the review! Very thoughtful and kind Many people and I thought Tom did an amazing job not only acting but getting all our performances out of us. His day job is as an actor and I think he made an amazing Roland Drake.
