The service uses signed and encrypted messages. You need to configure logging so that you can read the contents of the messages. What should you do? Set `logMessageAtServiceLevel` to true. Set `maxMessagesToLog` to Set `logMessageAtTransportLevel` to true. Your company has an existing Windows Communication Foundation WCF service that allows business partners to place orders. The service uses `netMsmqBinding`. You find that processing every order in its own transaction is causing a delay. You need to ensure that the service is configured to process multiple orders in one transaction. You create an intermediate WCF service for logging messages sent to the primary service. The intermediate service is called via the `clientVia` endpoint behavior. The primary service is receiving malformed data from a client application. You need to enable inspection of the malformed data and prevent message tampering. Specify a protection level of `None` in the service contract for the intermediate service. Disable message and transport security from the client application configuration file. Specify a protection level of `Sign` in the service contract for the intermediate service. Disable transport security from the client application configuration file. Modify the binding on the intermediate service to use `netNamedPipeBinding`. Modify the binding on the intermediate service to use `webHttpBinding`. You have the following requirements: Messages must be sent over TCP. The service must support transactions. Messages must be encoded using a binary encoding. Messages must be secured using Windows stream-based security. You need to implement a custom binding for the service. In which order should the binding stack be configured? Older client applications access the service at `http`: Newer client applications access the service at `https`: You need to ensure that any client application can access the service at either address. Which code segment should you use?
