Then after reading Armada I fully realized what a talentless one-trick hack that Cline really is so I changed this rating. Adventures in Time Mowing After my laptop fused to my lawn mower due to a freak lightning strike, I discovered that I could use it to travel through time. Got a time mower and decided to come to the future. I gotta say, things are looking kind of grim around here. Are those mobile homes stacked up like hillbilly skyscrapers? Life kinda sucks ass these days. He left three keys to three gates hidden in here, and the clues have to be stuff that he loved. Nobody has found the first key yet. Listen to the music? Read his favorite books? Play old video games? The clothes and hairstyles are considered cool again. Well, I gotta get the hell out of here then. Thanks for showing me this, Wade. How do I log out? You said you were from ? High school class of You gotta tell me all about it, Kemper. Just for a contest? It was the coolest time ever! That not worrying about the Cold War thing was a relief and the music was a lot better. Plus we got to wear flannel. I lived through it all. About ten years after I got out of high school, an old buddy I had stayed in touch with had a birthday bash and invited a bunch of us that used to run around together. Anyhow, I found a new Foo Fighters album, and I put it in. And this one guy made a face and asked me why I had taken the Guns-n-Roses out. And I said something like the nostalgia had been fun but I needed something from that decade. And that was one of the saddest things I ever heard, Wade. And I can still belt out a pretty good version of Relax when Frankie Goes to Hollywood comes on the radio, but it was a certain time and place. I find it depressing that someone of Gen X would want to be stuck there and never moved on to anything new. But it got worse after that, Wade. Because we got older and then the media started catering to us by going for nostalgia trips on everything from trying to remake the Knight Rider TV show to shitty movies like The Transformers and G. Joe to the goddamn Smurfs. But no one is working on that because all of us got obsessed with regurgitating our childhoods over and over. You seem like a nice kid. By the way, what the hell was this prize that was so good that it got the entire world doing the safety dance again? Fire this rig up, Wade. Put on some Def Leppard and find me a pair of acid washed jeans and some high top Reeboks. It did a lot of very clever stuff regarding an entire virtual universe. And for a member of Gen X, it was a fast and fun romp down memory lane. It was just too good. Sorry, but that seems kind of unlikely and the kind of wishful thinking that an aging Gen Xer would write as he pines for his glory days.

Sing and Read Number Songs One of the reasons I love the Sing and Read number songs is that they provide opportunities for differentiation in the classroom. For those children who are just learning about numbers, the songs and books provide them with the repetition that is necessary for the concept to stick in long term memory. The songs provide a supportive structure that helps them feel confident as they learn to identify numbers. For children who are beyond simple number identification, the spelling of the word is very helpful. I have had many children who learned the words in the song very quickly in addition to being able to fluently recognize the numbers.
