This production was later transferred to Broadway with several changes in the music and actors. Broadway [edit] The musical opened on Broadway at the Nederlander Theatre for a limited engagement starting in previews on March 15, , and officially on March 29, During the and seasons, the tour was expected to play 25 cities, over 43 weeks. Disney then announced the musical production would be available digitally on May 23, Jack lives with his fellow "newsies," many of whom are orphaned and homeless. As the sun rises, the newsies awaken and prepare for another day on the job "Carrying the Banner". While buying their supply of papers to sell, Jack meets Davey and his little brother, Les. Unlike the rest of the newsies, Davey and Les have a home and a family. They started work as newsies because their father suffered an accident at work resulting in the termination of his employment. Seeing young Les as an opportunity to sell more papers, Jack offers to help the boys. Meanwhile, the publisher of the New York World , Joseph Pulitzer , increases the cost of the newspapers to the delivery boys, so as to outsell his competitors "The Bottom Line". Jack refuses to tell Davey why Snyder was after him. While at the show, Jack spots a young female reporter named Katherine Plumber. He attempts to flirt with her, but she brushes him off as he does a drawing of her. The next morning, Jack and the newsies discover that the cost of newspapers has been raised to sixty cents per hundred. The protest is cut short when the boys are engaged in confrontations with the police and strikebreakers. During the commotion, Crutchie is beaten, apprehended, and taken to the refuge. Thrilled, the newsies all rejoice at making the headline and imagine what it would be like to be famous "King of New York". Meanwhile, Crutchie writes a letter to Jack, reflecting his experience at the Refuge "Letter from the Refuge". Davey and Katherine attempt to decide their next move, but Jack refuses to put the newsies in danger again. Jack eventually complies "Watch What Happens" reprise. Snyder reveals that Jack is actually an escaped criminal, originally detained for stealing food and clothing. Jack soon arrives and confronts Pulitzer. Katherine, who was hiding in the room, tries to apologize to Jack for not telling him, but Jack brushes her off as he is led by Snyder into the cellar. Pulitzer offers Jack a compromise: Davey and the newsies are shocked at Jack and turn their back on him. She also criticizes Jack for not being honest with her about ending up in the refuge for stealing. However, after seeing a drawing Jack made depicting the abuse conducted at the refuge, she realizes Jack stole the food and clothing for the other boys there. The two share a brief romantic moment and Katherine states that "I have something to believe in, now that I know you believed in me". Jack admits that the feeling is mutual, and they kiss "Something to Believe In". Jack and Katherine then join the newsies in printing their own paper; one that will determine the outcome of the strike "Once and for All". Defeated, Pulitzer compromises with Jack once more. Jack proposes that Pulitzer buy back every paper the newsies fail to sell every day, thus making him seem more generous and making more boys want to sell papers for him. Pulitzer is reluctant at first, but agrees. Crutchie is freed, Snyder is arrested, the refuge is shut down, and the strike ends. Pulitzer offers Jack a job as a daily political cartoonist, which Jack initially declines. Jack prepares to say goodbye to Katherine, as he now plans to leave for Santa Fe, but Katherine says that wherever he goes she will go with him. The two share a kiss, and Jack elects to remain a newsboy and accept the cartoonist job "Finale".
