

4 Subtle Ways to Spread Peace in Your World "If in our daily life we can smile, if we can be peaceful and happy, not only we, but everyone will profit from it. This is the most basic kind of peace work."

He enjoyed his correspondence with Starrett. And he closed by asking Morley: Is this band still operating, and is membership in it beyond the realm of my aspirations? For the first time, Edgar was a published Sherlockian. In fact there would not be a BSI dinner that winter; not until , after Edgar himself started pushing in earnest later on for one. It was a long time before lunch, too, though their correspondence became more kinspritch in the interim. Clarke and his friends had been unaware of the BSI, and when they later learned of it were unimpressed, and made no move to connect. In a BSJ article Clarke recounted the event: It was in [] that Edgar W. Smith joined our society. We spent a number of weeks studying his dossiers, and later we ascertained that he was doing the same research regarding ourselves. His house had considerable resemblance to London town houses at the turn of the century. The same could be said of the well-laden table and groaning sideboard. Much jollification ensued, including various and serious literary contributions. Among other courses was a fine roast goose in which was embedded a fine sparking blue stone. Annual dinner meetings have been held every year with the exception of the years to , during the recent unpleasantness. Edgar Rises Higher at Work There were consolations at work also. This meant promotion and greater responsibility for Edgar. Previously he had been a v. In the new organization, he became vice president and director of Institutional Relations, both internally in terms of personnel, and externally in terms of trade associations, government, and the like. GM might be a company of machinery producing other machines in the form of automobiles, trucks, locomotives, etc. These assets, less tangible but equally important with the others, take the form, specifically, of the human resources the organization possesses and the part played by the organization itself in the economic, social, and political world in which it moves. The increasingly vital and sensitive Governmental Relations Division and its work were directed by Edgar himself, in addition to his overall duties: Smith, who has, for several years, maintained the frequent contacts in Washington necessitated by increased government activity. In an increasingly menaced world, this was serious responsibility indeed. Those things had been explained away, by Europeans and Americans unwilling to confront Hitler, as simply internal matters. Warned to Gird for Economic War. Hall, a fellow founder of the BSI. In Hall provided an account of that lunch. He lost no time in launching into the reason for the meeting: Watson for most of his career, he wondered if he might be permitted to become a member. Morley, always delighted with a quiz program of any sort, tossed several questions at Edgar, some of them really tough, but Edgar came through with flying colors. He was accordingly dubbed, with the help of an additional whiskey-and-soda, a full-fledged member on the spot. Since then I have always rated the meeting of Morley and Smith second in importance only to that of Stanley and Livingstone. The rest we all know about. I had the pleasure on several occasions of calling on him in his sumptuous quarters at General Motors, not, God help me, to talk about automobiles, but to discuss some point or other about the B. And I never failed to notice that the contents of one half of his enormous desk was Sherlock Holmes. It was an important event for General Motors, long in the planning, and for Edgar personally. Smith, has planned the exhibit to help the man in the street to visualize the many phases of world trade through animated charts, graphs and dioramas. Motion pictures depicting the interdependence of all nations will be shown afternoons and nights. Norman Angell, that economic inter-dependence had made militaries obsolete, and would end war. Four years later the World War was underway. That it proved fruitless probably did not surprise Edgar by now, for all his upbeat words at the time. But it was an unselfish viewpoint nonetheless: In speaking as a businessman, and as an individual, I am trying not to speak as one who happens to be engaged in the business of exporting automobiles; I am trying rather to see the foreign situation through the eyes of the inland manufacturer, and the small shopkeeper, and the farmer, and the men and women in all walks of life who look to the world at large, as they must, for their well-being, their jobs and their very sustenance. There is not one true isolationist, there is not one philosophical caveman, among all the millions who toil to produce and distribute the material wealth that mankind needs. Nor can there ever be " for they are a part of the business world, and the business world is inextricably interwoven with what we call the foreign situation " and the foreign situation itself, in all its most frightening implications, is simply the result of good business practices gone wrong. What the businessman asks is no more than a restoration of the right for all to buy in the best market and to sell on a basis of equal opportunity. The situation is no longer in the hands of the businessman today; it lies instead in the hands of the rulers of governments. We must hope that those rulers will sit down together in an earnest endeavor to undo the harm that many of their kind have done, and that they will find a way to turn this problem of supplying the world with the goods it needs back at last into the hands of the businessman where it belongs. Large numbers of reservists in the Opel workforce were being called up, and orders for the Blitz truck were accelerated. Then on August 22nd the entire world learned what was coming when the Nazi-Soviet Pact was revealed: Nine days later Germany invaded Poland. Three more days later, a reluctant Britain and France declared war on Germany, though without doing anything to save Poland. Stalin invaded Poland from the east, started secret preparations to attack Finland in November, and subsequently to invade the independent Baltic Republics. The following day, Mooney headed for Paris. Because of the striking successes of the overseas division despite the Depression, he was portrayed in newspapers and popular magazines as the ideal pragmatic, problem-solving American businessman. His flamboyant style made him a popular after-dinner speaker, and his views on world affairs were headline news. The war in Europe, though so far involving no British or French military operations against Germany, was in the way of business, and Mooney had scant confidence in the government handling U. These views led Mooney into the ranks of the economic appeasers of the s. Mooney continued on to London, where defeatist-minded Ambassador Joseph P. The reaction was mixed. But a Third Reich under new leadership could be a different story, and in November Mooney was back in Berlin with an informal Whitehall message to that effect. Mooney wanted to sound out Helmuth Wohlthat before Goering himself, but heard that Wohlthat had left for Rome. Mooney proceeded there, and spent two weeks waiting for Wohlthat to show up. When he did, he told Mooney that what Goering had hinted at in October was now impossible. By now it was December, and Mooney returned to the United States. Just a line to wish you good luck and I shall expect you to drop in to see me when you return to America. Meanwhile the State Department gave Mooney the cold shoulder in Washington, and again in Europe when Mooney returned there. In Berlin, in early March, Mooney went to the length of crashing a U. Embassy reception for visiting Under Secretary Sumner Welles, in hopes of gaining his support, but Welles would not discuss it. Mooney did succeed in meeting with not only Goering again, but Adolf Hitler himself. Hitler reportedly talked an encouraging blue streak to Mooney in their meeting, without divulging that he had just approved plans to attack Denmark and Norway. Mooney left for Rome where he wrote detailed reports of his conversations with Goering and Hitler and sent them back to the President through Naval Intelligence channels at the U. It was a long time coming, and when it did, it was what disinterested observers would have recognized as dismissive. Then on April 9, Germany invaded Denmark and Norway. Mooney sailed for New York, occupying his time aboard ship by writing a speech he would deliver in Cleveland on June 1st. Once home he wrote to the President once more " posting his letter the day that Hitler attacked France and the Low Countries as well, leaving the British Army scrambling to be evacuated at Dunkirk. The war was on in earnest now, and so was a fierce struggle in America between isolationists and supporters of aid to Britain, where Winston Churchill now replaced Chamberlain as prime minister. In Part 5 next time: His interest would grow and develop until it culminated in his editing the text for the Limited Editions Club edition of the Canon in the late s and early s. Edgar became the Sixth Pip as Thorneycroft Huxtable, and in applied the concept to the BSI for its investitures membership system. Though not so-warned by all involved: It is of paramount importance that the efforts of diplomats and the heads of governments should be reinforced by efforts for economic appeasement. Brooklyn Daily Eagle, February 4, Address by Edgar W.

In terms of international law it was questionable, since it contained conditions of a political nature – the annulment of the Eastern Peace Treaties – and because it permitted the continuation of the British blockade until the so-called peace was finally concluded. In addition, the Allies continued their stance of refusing peace talks with their enemies, even after 11 November. They negotiated the peace treaty only among themselves. The main features were defined during a British-French-Italian pre-Conference that took place in London, in December. They also decided to put Emperor Wilhelm II on trial. President Wilson was purportedly unhappy with the result of the pre-Conference and told his delegation that he demanded a Just Peace. He threatened that if Lloyd George and Clemenceau were not to ease up on their demands, he would depart and conclude a separate peace with Germany. However, he did not follow through with this threat, apparently because he feared for the League of Nations that he endorsed. There were numerous commissions, but due to a lack of time or more likely, reluctance, the politicians were not able to thoroughly deliberate upon their submissions. Lloyd George realised that Clemenceau strove to attain excessive goals. In a comprehensive memorandum issued in late March, he urged that the conditions imposed on Germany be more moderate so that the Peace Treaty should not be a cause for embitterment. Clemenceau rejected this memorandum outright and successfully insisted on his hard-line approach. So they were detained in hotels for the time being. On the morning of 7 May, only a few hours before the hand-over, it was finally ready in printed form; up to that moment, no-one had been able to read and evaluate it in its entirety. The German delegation considered it unacceptable and developed several counter-propositions by the end of May, but nearly all of them were rejected. The German government then recommended that the National Assembly in Weimar accept the treaty, which it did on 22 June, with the exception of Articles – These Articles were concerned about bringing the German Emperor to trial and convicting war criminals. The victorious powers did not accept this. Instead they gave an ultimatum to sign the treaty and the National Assembly complied. For the two German delegates, this act was demeaning. The young British diplomat Harold Nicolson, found it abominable. On the day of the second vote in the National Assembly, on 23 June, Quartermaster General Groener said in the Supreme Army Command, that not to accept it would result in bringing on a war of total annihilation by France against Germany. In that case, the Allies would have restarted their advance – so Weimar knew from American sources – and separated Southern Germany from the North, given separate Peace Treaties to the southern states and also detached the Rhineland from Germany. Clemenceau wanted to form an independent state on the left banks of the Rhine which was to constitute an economic and military system together with Belgium, Luxemburg and France. Half the iron ore and one quarter of the coal production, as well as one seventh of agricultural production were taken from her. German colonies and all foreign possessions of the Reich were lost. Most of the commercial fleet had to be handed over and long-term economic discrimination accepted. The army and navy had to decrease their size quite considerably. The Rhineland was de-militarised, split in three zones and occupied by Allied forces for five to fifteen years. The Saarland was put under the mandate of the League of Nations. The independence of Austria, whose National Assembly had voted to accept the connection to the German Reich, was to be guaranteed in perpetuity. The amount of reparations was to be determined at a later time. The sum to be compiled would be very high, and paying it would take several decades, was without doubt. In the line of European Peace Treaties concluded since the 17th century, the Treaty of Versailles was nearly unique in that there was no negotiation with the conquered party. His foreign minister Lansing, considered the conditions imposed on Germany as unutterably hard and abasing, many of them impossible to comply with. His adviser, Mandell House wrote in his diary on 29 June, that the treaty was bad and should never have been concluded; its execution would bring no end of difficulties over Europe. He told a journalist that one could not urge a nation of 60 million people to pay a toll to another for 44 years. This would be like forcing this nation to start a new war. As a matter of fact, regulating the issue of reparations had fatal consequences indeed. In early , the total amount claimed from Germany was determined to be billion gold Marks, a few months later, after Germany had protested, this was reduced to billion. In doing so, France hoped to be able to sever the Rhineland from Germany and to be able to moreover loosen the cohesion of the Reich. Protests in front of the Reichstag against the Versailles Treaty The occupation of the Ruhr constituted a clear breach of the Treaty of Versailles. In Germany, it caused strong national emotions, but it also caused Great Britain to step out of the restraint it so far had shown towards France and get it to the negotiation table. Thus came about the Dawes plan in , which set up an interim regulation regarding the reparations, a guarantee of the German-French border in , and the admission of Germany into the League of Nations in The final fixing of the reparation burden was brought about by the Hague Conference in January , whose main content had become known as early as mid- Cologne " Protests against the Versailles Treaty, continue According to this so-called Young Plan, the Reich would have to pay a total of billion Marks over 58 years, until The first annual rate amounted to 1. These elections in late July of brought in Appreciation to Hans Fenske, Professor of Contemporary History, at Freiburg University for all his scholarly compiled research.

The Lion King - pt 9 false lion of Judah Female snakes possess cryptic female choice, through storing sperm, and thus can influence when egg fertilization occurs. By storing sperm, a single clutch of baby snakes can contain DNA from multiple males. Stray dogs can also produce litters in which every puppy has a different sire. This occurs when a mother releases two eggs that are independently fertilised by two different sperm from the father. Fraternal twins are simply two ordinary siblings, arising from two fertilised eggs in the same cycle, and thus are born at the same time. Fraternal twins are the most common type of twin. Less common are superfecundation twins. Believe it or not, human twins can also have separate fathers. It can happen when a woman has sexual intercourse with two or more men within the same menstrual cycle. Superfecundation is the fertilisation of two eggs, within one menstrual cycle, by sperm from separate acts of sexual intercourse. Who wants to talk about having twins from separate fathers? Yet, now, with genetic testing becoming more accurate and available, superfecundation is more evident. The other seedline Cain and wife thru Enoch; Genesis 4 belongs to the serpent, or satan, and his offspring are known as the children of Cain from the sexual union between satan and Eve , or the kenites. The original wheat and tare grew up together as twins - Abel and Cain. Satan, the tree of the knowledge of hypocrisy and double-mindedness, is corrupt and his works are evil. For a corrupt tree bringeth not forth good fruit. The "fruit" from this tree, as a result of sexual intercourse between a woman and the leader of the fallen angels, satan, is a child Cain. Fruit is also connected with seed. There are seeds for sowing in your mind , seeds for eating for your physical body and seeds for procreation. Eve ended her sentence with "lest ye die", but we know from Genesis 2: The phrase, "neither shall ye touch it" is new information to the reader, because they were not stated in Genesis Ch 2. It can mean to touch, or draw near, such as in Exodus Or it can mean to touch in a sexual manner or lie, as in sexual intercourse with someone, as in Genesis Or is it a sin to "touch" someone other than your own spouse? Which version are you going to believe? Use some common sense here. The word "wise" in this verse refers to carnal knowledge, which is enlightenment in the occult through esoteric knowledge. The real sin in the Garden was a satanic sex rite, an initiation, and the participants were satan, Eve and Adam. And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground. Two male partners in this case, Adam and satan had sexual intercourse with the same female partner Eve. Life begins at conception. All that openeth the matrix belongs to GOD. Even though Cain was the son of satan, his very soul belongs to GOD. And wherefore slew he him? He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: The original wheat and tare grew up together as twins, Abel and Cain. They brought their offerings to GOD at the same time, being born at the same time, but the genealogies of Adam and Cain are listed separately, in the Book of Genesis. Abel was murdered by Cain, the first murderer, and therefore, had no progeny. From umbilical cord through umbilical cord, from Adam and Eve all the way to Mary, the Savior was born. So you will also see in Luke 3 that it was Seth, from Adam and Eve, and not Cain, through which the Messianic seedline would continue. The Tree of Life is Jesus Christ. The tree of the knowledge of good and evil is satan. Later, Cain would murder Abel. This is the first great promise and prophesy. And the enmity exists unto this day. The Hebrew word is "zera" from "zara", zaw-rah , and in Greek, it would be "sperma". From H; seed; figuratively fruit, plant, sowing time, posterity:

Faith has absolutely nothing to do with believing in fables. He never promoted the systems of men or their doctrines. The precepts of men keep people in bondage but the Truth makes you free. Most Christians who buy into to the doctrines of men, and devils, are caught up in the ways and wisdom of this world. They never see past the illusions and hypocrisies within their own minds, rendering themselves neutral and lukewarm as soldiers in the battlefield. They respect persons in judgment and judge by the appearance, judging not righteous judgment, but hypocritical judgment. All of the leaders that they accept, choose or vote into religious, political, financial and educational offices will be the wrong leaders and shepherds. Moffatt translates 2 Timothy 4: The masses will give up all of their freedoms for the illusion of unity, equality, financial stability and protection from terrorism. The double-mindedness and hypocrisy of religious men will lead to the great apostasy in the end times. Restoring a state of Israel, one that is geographic and physical, and spiritually demonic, is not a Christian but an antichrist cause. The belief of one myth allows more through the doors of the mind, even seven more wicked than the original, and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Without knowing that Cain was a result of the sexual union between satan and Eve, a Christian will easily turn to myths. Feeling discomfort or cognitive dissonance is due to the unstableness in your mind from the doctrines of devils. Get into the meat of the Word. A living dog is better than a dead lion. And a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. And as it is employed only to call our attention to some specially designed emphasis, we are at once bound to diligently examine the figure for the purpose of discovering and learning the truth that is thus emphasized. Sometimes they have translated the figure literally, totally ignoring its existence; sometimes they have taken it fully into account, and have translated, not according to the letter, but according to the spirit; sometimes they have taken literal words and translated them figuratively. Man uses figures, but often at random and often in ignorance or in error. They look at Adam and Eve as mythical creatures who committed mythical sins. Seriously, how much does such a so-called Christian really know or understand? Indoctrinate means to teach a person or group to accept a set of beliefs uncritically. In the term "critical thinking", the word critical, Grk. Accepting a set of beliefs uncritically is accepting them without discernment. It requires the second belief or decision for the action to take place. Living a double life or by double standards are also forms of double-mindedness. Cognitive dissonance is the mental discomfort experienced when a person is double-minded, or performs an action contrary to his beliefs, ideas or values, or when confronted with truth that conflicts with his existing beliefs, ideas or values. Indoctrinated minds lack critical thinking skills. Critical reading and critical thinking work together. Indoctrination is also passed down from one generation to the next by the traditions of men. The word "tongues" in this verse simply means languages or a naturally unacquired one, like learning a second language, or with the use of interpreters. The Word would eventually be spread throughout the world, and the Gospel would be shared in multiple languages by different kindreds and races. No interpreter is necessary; it is not gibberish like some churches teach. Drinking poison leads to the same outcome. The real poison is the malicious lies, slander and gossip which people will say against you.
