But these 10 Illinois Bass lakes see little fishing pressure. The bass are waiting for you! Folks around Carterville still talk about the johnboat Hoop-I used to run back in the days when the Illinois Department of Natural Resources was called the Illinois Department of Conservation. This watercraft was the same make and model as boats used by state game wardens, identical right down to the horsepower Johnson outboard on the transom and official 3-inch-high lettering just under the gunnel on both sides. Of course, the best deception is holding information about favorite bass haunts close to the vest. Following is a look at some Prairie State bucketmouth waters you might be tempted to lie about - even when the truth is better. Visitor Pond is essentially catch-and-release, with a bag limit of one fish over 21 inches in place. Whoppers of biblical proportion swim in these fertile waters, and using a Slug-Go or similar soft-plastic finesse bait is the best way to provoke a strike right now. Access is walk-in only. DNR biologist Chris Bickers says mature largemouths here grow big fast on a high-protein diet of little rainbow trout, which would make that trout-patterned Rapala in your tackle box an excellent bet. As you might imagine with a trout-holding lake, these waters are cold and exceptionally clear. A well-maintained path around Ferne Clyffe State Park provides excellent access for shore-anglers. A inch minimum is enforced on bass. Since Dutchman is a water-retention lake, water clarity depends greatly on any run-off entering the system. There is a good matrix of weeds here, including milfoil and some coontail. Another good place to target is along the rocky wall on the southwest side of the lake. There is a marginal boat ramp at the other end, with a horsepower limit in effect. According to biologist Bickers, over one-third of the bass here are bigger than 15 inches, with bass approaching double digits swimming in the system. A horsepower limit is in effect on these acres. There are some good weeds, some woody cover and a pretty much untapped bass population swimming in these sometimes murky waters. Most folks living in the northern two-thirds of Illinois have no idea about the number and diversity of lakes found in the Shawnee National Forest. You just need a few things: There are over lakes in the Shawnee. Several of these are better than Dutchman and Bay Creek No. An inch, one-bass-daily limit imposed here several years ago has produced impressive results. Fisheries surveys have cranked up over bass per hour, with over 25 percent of bass sampled at or above legal size requirements. Most of the shoreline here is undeveloped. The water is somewhat turbid. Little weed growth forces fish to take up residence in standing timber, deadfalls and Christmas tree lunger structures that have been placed here over the past several years. Rat-L-Traps, topwaters and spinnerbaits are hot lures here throughout much of the fishing season, with action improving considerably when cooler weather arrives. There is a good boat launch on the southeast side of the lake, but a horsepower limit is in effect. According to the DNR, these Perry County acres, located just north of town and west of Highway , may be the best no-name public bass water in our state. Like Pinckneyville, water clarity is usually somewhat murky. As a result you can find good results just working the shoreline, even now in the dog days of August, especially around some of the boat docks out from the extensively developed shoreline. Check your drag before heading out on these waters. Tackle-busting hybrid stripers that have been stocked here over the past several years are starting to develop considerable shoulders. A three-bass, inch minimum on both smallmouths and largemouths is in place on the entire FWA, with a horsepower limit in effect. With a little effort you can usually catch a limit of fish on McMaster, or the smaller Lake Victoria. Getting to other strip-mine lakes in this complex takes effort, too - either by walking or riding a mountain bike back to some of the more remote waters. Herein lies the beauty of Snake Den Hollow: Even if you fished a different lake every day it would take all summer to fish them all. And bass in some of the more remote areas seldom see a hook. A belly boat provides the ultimate access to Snake Den Hollow, with plenty of action to keep even the most ardent angler busy for years. DNR fisheries biologist Ken Russell has sampled bass in excess of 6 pounds in McMaster and "several of the other little lakes in the project. Maps are available at the site office. For more information, call the site superintendent at Boss and acre Osprey Lake have boat ramps in place, with construction nearly completed on the ramp for access at 6-acre High Wall Lake. As is the case with most strip-pit lakes, all of these waters have amazing clarity. DNR biologist Ken Clodfelter says visibility can be over 15 feet in early spring. A finesse presentation with small-diameter line and downsized baits is the best way to get hooked up here, with drop-shotting a particularly effective method of fooling these bass. For more information on fishing Mautino, contact the site office at A smaller state park complex nearby showcases acre Lake Matthiessen, which was killed off and restocked seven years ago by DNR fisheries biologist Ken Clodfelter. A concession at the lake rents canoes, which are great to use to access the bass population here. Matthiessen is a scenic little lake, and well protected from weather and wind from its location in a tree-filled valley. Since it is a drainage lake, visibility is less than 3 feet, with some algae bloom seen this time of year. Although it is just down the road from Starved Rock State Park - one of the busiest state parks in Illinois - it is possible to fish Matthiessen and get away from the crowds, effectively probing all potential bass haunts with just a couple hours on the water. But this shallow complex of backwaters and sloughs is also full of fish - most notably channel catfish, crappies and bass. Connecting channels between designated lakes receive virtually no fishing pressure, with bass pressure on the larger designated lakes being light, especially this time of year during the week. Three major lakes - Johnson, Wheel and Shovel - are the heart of fishing in this complex. Six-hundred-acre Johnson and acre Wheel are located in Peoria County, with Shovel just across the county line to the west in Fulton County checking in at about acres. There are a number of special regulations in effect at the Banner Marsh FWA, the most unusual of which is a horsepower-motor restriction. Johnson is the easiest to access, with a good concrete ramp in place. A three-fish daily bass limit is in effect, but the action is mostly catch-and-release, with all fish from 12 to 18 inches being protected by a slot limit. The key to finding bass in these waters lies in targeting weeds, like the cattails up in Wheel Lake or reeds in Shovel Lake. Bass well in excess of the inch protected slot length reside here. Plastics also work well. A favorite local tactic is rigging a Senko wacky-worm-style and casting it toward the weed edges. The "marsh" designation of this property is somewhat misleading. All three of these lakes have water in excess of 50 feet deep. Last summer here, 3, bass came into my boat before a quick release. Northern Illinois sportsmen who are contemplating purchase of property to access this hot "private" action should check with the local fisheries biologist prior to buying a membership lot, because not all private lakes are good bass lakes. And the bass are waiting for you!

I'm heading to Knox county for a week of Red Cross Disaster training and during my down time, I am hoping to get some fishing in. I have heard Knox is a great LMB lake, even from shore (where I'll be fishing) but I have also heard its over-crowded, but I dont know of any other place up there to fish.
