

Chapter 1 : Remembering Weary by Margaret Geddes (Paperback,) | eBay

Note: Citations are based on reference standards. However, formatting rules can vary widely between applications and fields of interest or study. The specific requirements or preferences of your reviewing publisher, classroom teacher, institution or organization should be applied.

And let us not grow weary of doing good, for in due season we will reap, if we do not give up. When we do good it brings him joy and he rewards us. Yet Paul warned the Galatians not to grow weary in doing good. We can be tempted to ask, Why am I denying myself and doing all this work? We keep asking God to save our teen yet he shows little interest in God. Or, I constantly try to bless my husband yet he never appreciates me. Sometimes when we do good things get worse Jesus healed and taught and his reward was torture and death on a cross. Joseph faithfully served his Egyptian master who tossed him unjustly into prison. It seems the more Moses obeyed God the worse he was treated. His own people said this to him: What have you done to us in bringing us out of Egypt? He must have felt like quitting so many times. We pray, then think what good did that do? I have prayed for suffering people and felt like my prayer went up in the air about 2 feet then fell to the floor. The prayer of a righteous person has great power as it is working. Elijah was a man with a nature like ours, and he prayed fervently that it might not rain, and for three years and six months it did not rain on the earth. Then he prayed again, and heaven gave rain, and the earth bore its fruit. He prayed again and it rained and the earth was fruitful. Elijah is a super hero. Elijah was a man with a nature like ours. He was no different than us, a mere human. But he prayed fervently and God answered because the prayer of a righteous person has great power as it is working. We just need to plant seeds â€” a simple prayer, a word of encouragement, work on memorizing one scripture. A small gift to missions. God is not man, that he should lie, or a son of man, that he should change his mind. Has he said, and will he not do it? Or has he spoken, and will he not fulfill it? It is often in this life, but often in the next. He who goes out weeping, bearing the seed for sowing, SHALL come home with shouts of joy, bringing his sheaves with him. Remember, the seeds we sow are powerful. Something good really is happening even if we suffer initially. I enjoy songwriting, oil painting and coffee, not necessarily in that order.

Chapter 2 : Remembering Weary (Book,) [racedaydvl.com]

Sir Edward 'Weary' Dunlop was a hero to many people. He lived his life to the full and in the service of others. In this fascinating work, Margaret Geddes has interviewed many of Weary's friends, colleagues and family to bring together their insight and understanding of this great Australian.

As long as we live, they too will live; For they are now a part of us: As we remember them! At the rising sun and at its going down we remember them. At the blowing of the wind and in the chill of winter we remember them. At the opening of the buds and in the rebirth of spring we remember them. At the blueness of the skies and in the warmth of summer we remember them. At the rustling of the leaves and in the beauty of the autumn we remember them. At the beginning of the year and when it ends we remember them. As long as we live, they too will live, for they are now a part of us. As we remember them. When we are weary and in need of strength we remember them. When we are lost and sick at heart we remember them. When we have decisions that are difficult to make we remember them. When we have joy we crave to share we remember them. When we have achievements that are based on theirs we remember them. For as long as we live, they too will live, For they are now a part of us, as we remember them. I took his hand when I heard his call, I turned my back and left it all. I could not stay another day, To laugh, to love, to work, to play. If my parting has left a void, Then fill it with remembered joy. A friendship shared, a laugh, a kiss, Ah yes, these things I too will miss. Be not burdened with times of sorrow, I wish you the sunshine of tomorrow. Lift up your heart and share with me, God wanted me now, He set me free. Yet, no person is really alone; Those who live no more still echo Within our thoughts and words, And what they did has become Woven into what we are.

Chapter 3 : Memorial Verses | Obituaries | Classifieds | National Post

The fact that wear down and weary both relate to being tired can also help you remember weary's meaning. Remember not to let the rhyming of leery and weary confuse you. Wary and leery share a meaning, but not their pronunciation.

Wary and weary are two words that sound almost "but not exactly" alike. Both words are adjectives. However, their similarities end there. These two words have no overlap in meaning. Wary has a long a sound and means cautious or suspicious of something or someone. However, if you must do so, you should constantly be wary of him. Weary has a long e sound and means tired or exhausted. I am weary after my long journey. I shall require some rest. The main error that people make with these two words is saying weary when they mean wary. Using Wary in a Sentence When to use wary: This adjective describes feeling uneasy about a person or situation. People use it to describe being careful around someone or something. Wary comes an Old English word that meant prudent or alert. For example, Always be wary of pickpockets when you travel abroad. My dog is always wary of strangers. It is possible that people accidentally say weary when they mean wary because they are combining the word wary with the word leery. Leery has the same meaning as wary, but it has a long e sound, just like weary. Using Weary in a Sentence When to use weary: People often use this word to describe feeling spent after a long day of work. They can also use it when they are figuratively tired of something, such as tired of listening to excuses or complaining. It can also act as a verb, meaning to make someone tired. It sounds more flowery than typical spoken English. However, weary does occur frequently in novels and movies. Weary One way to help you remember the difference between these two words is to use their spelling. Wary starts with the letters war. In a war, soldiers must always be wary. Also, the word aware contains the letters war, and to be wary means a person must also be aware. Another way involves the word weary. Weary starts with the letters wear. One of the meanings of wear is to wear someone down. In other words, make them tired through constant nagging or other pressure. Remember not to let the rhyming of leery and weary confuse you. Wary and leery share a meaning, but not their pronunciation. Outside Examples North Korea on Friday test-fired its second intercontinental ballistic missile, which flew longer and higher than the first according to its wary neighbors, leading analysts to conclude that a wide swath of the U. Fill in the blank with the correct word, either weary or wary. Article Summary Should I use wary or weary? These words look alike at first glance, but they have completely unrelated meanings. Therefore, you can never interchange them. Wary means to be cautious and aware of possible danger. Weary means to feel exhausted. Be especially cautious to use the long a sound in wary, like in the word aware.

Chapter 4 : Clive Wearing - Wikipedia

Remembering Weary Sir Edward Dunlop POW Military Hero. Sir Edward 'Weary' Dunlop was a hero to many people. He lived his life to the full and in the service of others.

And though the years be many or few, They are filled with remembrance of you. The dearest mother, the kindest friend, One of the best whom God could lend, Loving, thoughtful, gentle and true, Always willing a kind act to do. The depths of sorrow we cannot tell, Of the loss of one we loved so well; And while she sleeps a peaceful sleep, Her memory we shall always keep. The world may change from year to year And friends from day to day, But never will the one I loved From memory pass away. Just when her life was brightest, Just when her hopes were best, God called her from among us To a home of eternal rest. There is a mother who misses you sadly, And finds the time long since you went; And I think of you daily and hourly, But try to be brave and content. But the tears that I shed in silence, And breathe a sigh of regret, For you were mine, and I remember, Though all the world forget. Three little words, Forget me not. Just a memory fond and true, To show, dear mother, we think of you. Down here we mourn, but not in vain, For up in Heaven we will meet again. We have only a memory, dear mother. We cherish our whole life through; But the sweetness will live forever As we treasure the memory of you. What would we give her hand to clasp, Her patient face to see, To hear her voice, to see her smile, As in the days that used to be. When days are dark and friends are few, Dear mother, how we think of you. Friends are friends if they are true We lost our best friend when we lost you. Father, Brother or Son As we loved you, so we miss you; In our memory you are near. Loved, remembered, longed for always, Bringing many a silent tear. Borne away from sin and sorrow To a better home above. Death cannot sever the ties that bind Our souls through mortal years- They last forever. Every hour we dearly miss him, Sadly do we feel his loss, Lonely in our home without him Help us, Lord, to bear the cross. Fond memories linger every day Remembrance keeps him near. Gone is the face we loved so dear, Silent is the voice we loved to hear, Too far away for sight or speech, But not too far for thought to reach, Sweet to remember him who once was here, And who, though absent, is just as dear. Gone, dear father, gone forever, How we miss your smiling face, But you left us to remember None on earth can take your place. A happy home we once enjoyed - How sweet the memory still- But death has left a loneliness The world can never fill. Gone, dear father, gone to rest, Away from sorrow, care and pain; May you rest in peace, dear father, Until we meet again. He bade no one a last farewell, He said good-bye to none; The heavenly gates were opened wide, A loving voice said, "Come". He had a nature you could not help loving And a heart that was purer than gold And to those who knew him and loved him His memory will never grow cold.

Chapter 5 : When I'm Gone - A Life Poem

Minimal dustjacket wear, inside dustjacket has some faint foxing marks, top page edges have one or two faint foxing marks, first and last pages (blank) have faint vertical markings caused by dustjacket flaps, p has a small faint discoloration mark.

It can be difficult to keep track of all the adjectives in English. An adjective is a word that describes a quality or condition of a noun. Best describes one characteristic of the day, though the day may also have had other characteristics, like hot, long, or sunny. Young describes the one quality of the life in question, which could also have had other qualities, such as active or joyful, but hopefully not short. Wary and weary are two adjectives that are spelled very similarly. They have different meanings, though. If you accidentally use the wrong one, people might describe you using the adjectives silly, uninformed, or dull. Of course, you could use the adjectives harsh and judgmental to describe such people, but it would be better to just use the correct word in the first place. What is the Difference Between Weary and Wary? In this article, I will compare weary vs. I will use each word in example sentences to illustrate their proper uses. When to Use Weary What does weary mean? Weary means tired or no longer interested. For example, Weary of the argument, the woman let her friend believe he was right. The Christian Bible proclaims that those who believe in the Lord shall run and not grow weary. American consumers have been picking up much of the slack, powering the recovery by shopping online and buying cars. But there are signs that they, too, are growing weary of opening their wallets. It means to become tired or disinterested or to cause someone to become tired or disinterested. A batter hitting several foul balls in a row will weary the pitcher. Wary pronounced wear-ee, rhymes with scary can also serve as an adjective, but it has a different meaning from weary. Wary is defined as feeling or showing caution about possible dangers. For example, Even though the mouse was hungry, it was wary of the danger posed by the mousetrap. I was wary to begin a new project with the end of my shift so close at hand. Many investors are wary of the commodity price rally, saying it has been fueled by Chinese financial stimulus rather than a real recovery in demand or any output curbs from the big producers. If the word functions as a verb in the sentence, then weary is the only choice. Wary is not a verb. Alert and cautious are, of course, synonyms for wary. Summary Is it wary or weary? The meanings of these words, however, are not so close. Wary means alert or Weary means tired or no longer interested. As a verb, weary means to become tired or no longer interested or to cause someone to become tired or no longer interested. Wary, on the other hand, is never a verb. When deciding between these words as adjectives, you can remember that wary rhymes with scary, and in scary situations, you will want to remain wary. You can also refer to this article if you need help.

Chapter 6 : The National Railroad Postcard Museum: Remembering the Old and Weary

Sir Edward 'Weary' Dunlop was a hero to many people. He lived his life to the full and in the service of others. In this fascinating collection, Margaret Geddes has interviewed many of Weary's friends, colleagues and family to bring together their insight and understanding of this great Australian.

Over time, the third and fourth stanzas of the poem usually nowadays just the fourth [1] have been claimed as a tribute to all casualties of war, regardless of state, and it is this selection of "For the Fallen" to which the term "Ode of Remembrance" usually refers. This section does not cite any sources. Please help improve this section by adding citations to reliable sources. Unsourced material may be challenged and removed. November Learn how and when to remove this template message Laurence Binyon composed the original poem, which has seven stanzas, while sitting on the cliffs between Pentire Point and The Rumps in north Cornwall , UK. A stone plaque was erected at the spot in to commemorate the fact. The plaque bears the inscription: For the Fallen Composed on these cliffs There is also a plaque on the beehive monument on the East Cliff above Portreath in central North Cornwall which cites that as the place where Binyon composed the poem. A plaque on a statue dedicated to the fallen in La Valletta , Malta, is also inscribed with these words. Wording stanzas 3, 4 and 5 only [edit] They went with songs to the battle, they were young. Straight of limb, true of eye, steady and aglow. They were staunch to the end against odds uncounted, They fell with their faces to the foe. They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old: Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn. At the going down of the sun and in the morning, We will remember them. On the other hand "condemn" was used when the poem was first printed in The Times on 21 September , and also in the anthology The Winnowing Fan: Poems of the Great War in in which the poem was later published. If either publication had contained a misprint, Binyon would have had the chance to make an appropriate amendment. In any case, this issue seems to have arisen only in Australia , with little or no debate in other Commonwealth countries that mark Remembrance Day. In Australia and New Zealand it is also part of the Dawn service at 4. Recitations of the "Ode of Remembrance" are often followed by a playing of the " Last Post ". In Canadian remembrance services, a French translation [4] is often used along with or instead of the English ode. In the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and Singapore, the final line of the ode, "We will remember them", is repeated in response. In Canada, the second stanza of the above extract has become known as the Act of Remembrance, and the final line is also repeated. It is mostly read by a British serviceman. The recital is followed by a minute of silence. In , at the centennial of the signing of the Armistice, plans were made to ring carillons and church bells across the British Commonwealth at local sundown, in reference to the line, "at the going down of the sun His setting of "For the Fallen" sparked some controversy as it was published after another setting of the same poem by the composer Cyril Rootham in Neither composer was responsible for this, and Elgar initially offered to withdraw but was persuaded to continue by the literary and art critic Sidney Colvin and by Binyon himself. Nottingham-based composer Alex Patterson also wrote a setting of the text in The recording itself is undated and appeared on a 78 rpm disc issued in Japan. Archived from the original on Retrieved 15 October

Chapter 7 : Armistice Day: Beacons lit and bells toll to remember war dead

Remember By Langston Hughes About this Poet Langston Hughes was first recognized as an important literary figure during the 1920s, a period known as the "Harlem."

Musical career[edit] Clive Wearing is an accomplished musician, and is known for editing the works of Orlande de Lassus. Wearing sang at Westminster Cathedral as a tenor lay clerk for many years and also had a successful career as a chorus master and worked as such at Covent Garden and with the London Sinfonietta Chorus. In 1961, he founded the Europa Singers of London, an amateur choir specialising in music of the 17th, 18th, and 20th centuries. It won critical approval especially for performances of the Monteverdi Vespers. For that occasion, he chose to recreate, with authentic instruments and meticulously researched scores, the Bavarian royal wedding which took place in Munich on 22 February 1623. Amnesia[edit] On 27 March 1969, Wearing, then an acknowledged expert in early music at the height of his career with BBC Radio 3, contracted herpessviral encephalitis, a herpes simplex virus that attacked his central nervous system. He has also been unable to control his emotions unstable mood and to associate memories effectively. Wearing developed a profound case of total amnesia as a result of his illness. Because of damage to the hippocampus, an area required to transfer memories from short-term to long-term memory, he is completely unable to form lasting new memories – his memory only lasts between 7 and 30 seconds. During this time, he repeatedly questions why he has not seen a doctor, as he constantly believes he has only recently awoken from a comatose state. If engaged in discussion, Clive is able to provide answers to questions, but cannot stay in the flow of conversation for longer than a few sentences. If asked about his current situation, he becomes very angry and upset, as he cannot obtain an explanation for his condition and thus feels interrogated. He remembers little of his life before; he knows, for example, that he has children from an earlier marriage, but cannot remember their names. His love for his second wife Deborah, whom he married the year prior to his illness, is undiminished. He greets her joyously every time they meet, either believing he has not seen her in years or that they have never met before, even though she may have just left the room to fetch a glass of water. When he goes out dining with his wife, he can remember the name of the food e. Page after page is filled with entries similar to the following: Now I am really, completely awake. Now I am perfectly, overwhelmingly awake. Now I am superlatively, actually awake. Earlier entries are usually crossed out, since he forgets having made an entry within minutes and dismisses the writings – he does not know how the entries were made or by whom, although he does recognise his own writing. Wearing can learn new practices and even a very few facts – not from episodic memory or encoding, but by acquiring new procedural memories through repetition. For example, having watched a certain video recording multiple times on successive days, he never had any memory of ever seeing the video or knowing the contents, but he was able to anticipate certain parts of the content without remembering how he learned them. Prisoner of Consciousness, in which he was interviewed by Jonathan Miller. His story was also told in episode No.

Chapter 8 : Poems and Prayers for memorial prayer cards - Boakes Funeral Home, Inc.

I would remember the potential for return, all things circling as they do, into something like fullness, small moments of completion that weave together, like Penelope's cloth, doing and undoing themselves by turns, an unfinished pattern that guides a weary traveler home .

Classic trains, stations, shops, yards, steam, diesel, traction, and more! Welcome to Vintage Railroad Postcards! Thank you for stopping by! This is the blog for the Russell P. Panecki Collection of vintage railroad-related postcards. The entire collection consists of nearly one thousand so far with images dating from circa to the s. To leave a comment, ask a question, to contribute or correct historical information, a comment box is located to the left for your convenience. Beginning in October, , the blog was redesigned to include an index of individual postcards, both listed in alphabetical order and by categories. Each page, including this homepage, has the index located in the lower portion of the page. In addition to the index, posts were updated with historical information, new postcards added from storage files, while some posts were completely rewritten or edited for corrections. Three articles have been added and are worth reading. They include how vintage postcards were made, the history of Pennsylvania Station, and the history of Grand Central Terminal. My apologies, but the postcards in my collection and on this blog are not available for sale, copying, or for contribution to projects. Please keep in mind that I reserve all rights to the images and content of this blog. Well, it had passenger service and milk business that extended up into the Catskill Mountain resort areas and up into northern and western New York state. It also hauled coal, a main source of freight revenue. All passenger service stopped in and the road shut down for good in This is a view of the short Haverstraw tunnel on the west side of the Hudson River, circa Here are two circa and views of the station. From what I understand, the station is still there, but is in pretty sad shape. This view of the yards at Middletown shows the large coal storage facility and the arched coal distribution machines in the background. Note the cabooses in the foreground. Here is a great circa view of the Kingston, NY station with the Catskill Mountains in the background. Note the gem of a camelback loco!

Chapter 9 : How To Not Grow Weary In Doing Good

God's word tells us to not grow weary in doing good. And let us not grow weary of doing good, for in due season we will reap, if we do not give up. GA You would not think that we who believe in Jesus would grow weary in doing good. He's been so good to us. When we do good it brings him joy.

He attended Benalla High School for two years of his education. He started an apprenticeship in pharmacy when he finished school, and moved to Melbourne in There, he studied at the Victorian College of Pharmacy and then the University of Melbourne , where he obtained a scholarship in medicine. The nickname "Weary" was a reference to his last nameâ€”"tired" like a Dunlop tyre. To date, he is the only Victorian so honoured. This statue "commemorates all Australian doctors and medical staff who served Australian prisoners of war in the Asia-Pacific region between and He re-enlisted in and was commissioned into the Australian Army Medical Corps on 1 July with the rank of Captain. In May Dunlop left Australia for London on a ship, where he served as her medical officer. The distinguished medical mentors Dunlop met in London, Professor Grey-Turner and Sir Thomas Dunhill , impressed him with their dedication to their job and he resolved to emulate their example. War and imprisonment[edit] During World War II , Dunlop was appointed to medical headquarters in the Middle East, where he developed the mobile surgical unit. In Greece he liaised with forward medical units and Allied headquarters, and at Tobruk he was a surgeon until the Australian Divisions were withdrawn for home defence. His troopship was diverted to Java in an ill-planned attempt to bolster the defences there. On 26 February , he was promoted to temporary lieutenant-colonel. Dunlop became a Japanese prisoner of war in when he was captured in Bandung , Java, together with the hospital he was commanding. Conditions in the railway camps were primitive and horrificâ€”food was totally inadequate, beatings were frequent and severe, there were no medical supplies, tropical diseases were rampant, and the Japanese required a level of productivity that would have been difficult for fully fit and properly equipped men to achieve. A courageous leader and compassionate doctor, he restored morale in those terrible prison camps and jungle hospitals. Dunlop defied his captors, gave hope to the sick and eased the anguish of the dying. He became, in the words of one of his men, "a lighthouse of sanity in a universe of madness and suffering". His example was one of the reasons why Australian survival rates were the highest. Post-war life[edit] After , with the darkness of the war years behind him, Dunlop forgave his captors and turned his energies to the task of healing and building. He was to state later that " in suffering we are all equal". He devoted himself to the health and welfare of former prisoners-of-war and their families, and worked to promote better relations between Australia and Asia. He was active in many spheres of endeavour. He became closely involved with a wide range of health and educational organisations, and served as President of the Australian Drug Foundation for 13 years, and also on the board of Cancer Council Victoria. He was the first Australian Patron of St. His tireless community work had a profound influence on Australians and on the people of Asia. As well as numerous tributes and distinctions bestowed upon him in his own country, he received honours from Thailand , India , Sri Lanka , and the United Kingdom. Honours and awards[edit].