Stuart came into the nursery. She was going out to dinner, and looked very beautiful in her soft satin dress and pearls. She was tall and stately, with the same golden hair as Molly, but her face was somewhat cold in expression. I can do nothing with her, a good whipping is what she wants! She was in the act of scrambling into bed, but upon receiving permission she made her way, a little shyly, across to where her mother was seated. Stuart said with a smile; but she put her arm round the little figure and kissed her, and sent her back to bed perfectly happy. All the children adored their mother, though it was adoration at a distance. How is it that I never visit the nursery without hearing complaints of your naughtiness? Stuart gazed perplexedly at her little daughter, then laughed. Go and say your prayers at once, and get into bed. I have come here to talk to nurse. Your master and I are going abroad after Easter; he is not well, and the doctors have ordered him away. I want to send you and the children into the country for the summer. Well, do you think they have room to take you all in? Let them run wild, nurse, they will come back to their lessons all the better for it. Miss Grant told me this morning she would have to give up teaching â€” her mother is very ill â€” so, all things combined, I think this plan will work well. Will you write to your brother and find out if he can take you in the last week in April? Let me know when you have heard from him. Stuart rose as she spoke; her visits were never long, and nurse left the room with her. Molly sat up in bed and looked thoughtful. Are you telling stories? Besides, nurse is sure to tell us; she knew we were awake and listening. He listened, rumpling up his fair curls, and blinking his blue eyes, which were already heavy with sleep. Molly joined delightedly in the fray; but, alas! Over she went, head first, on the floor, and the whole contents of the can flooded her and the carpet together. Douglas precipitately fled into his little room, and Molly into her bed, so that when nurse came hastily in Betty again was discovered as chief offender. But Easter came at last, and then packing-up began. Roper sat down on the stairs by her and laughed heartily. Sophy is running after all of us. Roper knew he was to be told no more. I am not rich enough to have such a holiday as is in prospect for you. I wonder what you will do with yourselves all the time? You must come back much the better and wiser, Betty, for it. She will teach you many a lesson, if you keep your eyes and ears open. I never heard nurse speak of her. How do you know her? I love her now, but my work is in London, and I never get much chance of seeing her. You will see her at her best, Betty. I shall expect you to come home and tell me all about her. A rush of feet behind them, and Molly and Douglas came tearing downstairs. Where have you been? Bobby has cut his head open, and Sophy has rushed to nurse, and nurse is scolding away, so we came off. Roper, does every farmer in the country go about in his night-shirt? Douglas says they do, and we have pictures of them. Roper made short work of these questions, and departed. He was a reserved, reticent man, and did not understand the boisterous spirits of the little Stuarts. Betty was his favourite; he was always ready for a chat with her, but the others worried him. Nurse was very thankful when she got herself and her little charges all comfortably settled in the railway carriage for Tiverstoke the next day. Sophy was not going with them, but the longing to be in the old home again quite compensated nurse for the additional labour and responsibility she would have. The children had parted from their parents with great composure. Stuart had reiterated parting injunctions to nurse, and their father had presented all five with a bright half-crown each, which gift greatly added to their delight at going. Stuart; and perhaps those words were an index to her character.
