

Chapter 1 : Harvest Song song and lyrics from KIDiddles

So we will not carry anything that has artificial flavorings, colorings, preservatives, or hydrogenated oils. The products we carry at golden harvest are hand picked for their ingredients, taste and quality.

Simon Grigg was on the sharp end of the Auckland punk scene at the time: Several of us went along expecting we could have a laugh, but the laugh was totally on us – these guys were incredible and we stood there in awe. We loved their unadulterated funk. In the page liner notes to the reissue remastered from the original tapes and with four additional A and B-side non-album tracks, Grant Gillanders of Frenzy Music fills in the long backstory of Golden Harvest. It was small beginning, but encouraging, and afterwards the brothers brought in sister Fiona as a dancer. Their mother Margaret made costumes and sometimes joining them on stage, while their father Eru became their manager. As the Tiki Five they played every Saturday at the Turangi Community Centre and at various functions around the district. Away from the public gaze of the main centres, they honed their craft. Away from the public gaze of the main centres, they honed their craft, Kevin becoming proficient at Hendrix manoeuvres such as playing behind his head. By the time they relocated to Auckland in – without Fiona and now renamed Brother – they were seasoned players if still a little rough around the edges in terms of professionalism. When they auditioned for promoter Benny Levin he immediately sensed their potential and arranged for music and vocal lessons. Signed to a three-year management contract with Levin alongside Craig Scott, Erena Clark and Bunny Walters, they entered the National Battle of the Bands – they came fourth, the winners were Think – and opened for Helen Reddy when the support act pulled out at the last minute. He won a three-pack collection of American Graffiti soundtrack albums. It did well enough to get them onto Ready To Roll, but their own sound was still being formed. The guys pretty much accepted me as part of their family, and for the next three years we were family. Its ethereal, even fragile, drone jumped off the radio, the testing ground of the single record. Live, a heavier number with a lot of showpiece in it might get more reaction, but recording is a different thing. I had to live with sore gums for some time. If you had the goods, then you were uber-cool and you could foot it with anyone. Golden Harvest did that. It was fleeting but it was superb. It was co-written by Gordon, his first songwriting effort. This time I did it seriously. But neither song had quite the same magic as their earlier work. And by that point Golden Harvest was starting to fray from the centre. We want to be different than any other New Zealand band. Kevin was the first to leave, in May of that year, wanting to move in a heavier direction – as his Hendrix infatuation had hinted at. Brother Gavin took over lead guitar for a while, but the end was in sight. In a sad coda, Kevin – the showman of the band famed for his incendiary guitar work – barely played music for many years. After moving to Australia in, he picked it up again with his band Eruption, which included brother Merv on drums. Both now went by the surname Johansen. But not to those who fell under their spell, either for the hit singles on radio or their sometimes spellbinding live show, which they took all over the country. Golden Harvest may have played on the same stage as the biggest and best internationals, but they also kept the faith with their local following. Auckland, Whangarei, Waiuku, Hamilton, Rotorua – Williams suggested some of these places must seem like their hometown.

Lauren Jernstadt "So, my friend and I waited an hour outside just to get in, but the wait was so worth it! The place itself is super cool to look around, and the staff.

Professor Emeritus John Percy of the Department of Astronomy and Astrophysics explains the mystery behind the harvest moon: First off, why is it called the harvest moon? In approximately a one month time frame, the moon revolves around the earth. At the same time the earth is revolving around the sun. What we see during the month is a series of moon phases, as the moon goes around its orbit. These phases include the new moon - when the sun and moon are in the same direction - and the full moon, which takes place about two weeks after the new moon. During the full moon, the sun is in one direction, the moon is in the other and the sun is fully illuminating the moon. As a result of the moon going around the earth, the moon rises on average 50 minutes later every night. So if the moon rises at 8pm tonight, it will rise an hour later tomorrow night. This is one thing to note. Because of this, the sun and the moon actually move northward and southward during their respective paths around the earth. During the year, the sun is furthest north of the equator on the first day of northern summer and its furthest south of the equator on the first day of northern winter. The moon, opposite the sun, is moving northward as the sun is moving southward. The season of fall is somewhat of a midway point for the sun and the moon. Because the moon is moving northward, it is rising about 25 minutes earlier than it normally would, or only about 25 minutes later each night. To answer your question on why the moon is called the harvest moon we need to go back to the time when everybody lived off of a rural environment. At this time of the year after sunset when people were bringing in the harvest, the earlier rising full moon provided additional light during the evening so people could extend their harvest collection. This is why the full moon at this time of the year is referred to as the harvest moon. Why does the harvest moon look so big? Why is it orange? That has nothing to do with the harvest moon.
