My reading habits tend to be all over the map as far as genre, and I also seem to have the retention ability of a screen door with the screens ripped out, and the door held open. Wow, using the internet to store extra memory, how futuristic can you get? Oh, and feel free to send me free books. No pressure, just a suggestion. Sad times, with moments of joy. Too much plot getting in the way of story for me. So, he has no real internal moral compass, and thus seems surprised that others might be able to make those moral distinctions on their own. The One and Only Shrek! Great, sometimes haunting illustrations in variety of styles, and compellingly strange and wonderful stories. Artists Inspired by H. Over 40 artists work and bios, full size and over, foldouts. Tons of amazing work!. Lucky to have this monster on my shelves! Good historical essays, and a rich source of bizarre reference images. Crams in more new ideas and just plain old strange situations than just about any other author. Looking forward to more. One of those writers who seems to have more new ideas per chapter than the average author has in entire books! Lindsay nonfiction pgs A look at the humorous side of funerals, including odd ceremonies, fashions, eulogies, and gravestone etchings. Another great sf book stuffed full of ideas and extrapolations. But does write very well, but ultimately, sad to read of such a wasted life. Great ideas, funny stuff, action-scenes any movie would be pleased to have. Just as engrossing as the previous two, though this one feels more open-ended, like there will definitely need to be at least one more to wrap up what he has set up here. McNally history pgs A biography of Countess Elizabeth Bathory, another historical figure used in vampire fiction. Interesting at first, but over half of the volume is just padding about other things to make the book seem larger. Now the only problem is, I have to wait for him to write a brand new one! Bush-Notes from the campaign trail". Lots of behind-the-scenes stuff and observations on the whole political process. Light and breezy, would probably make a fun art-house movie. Nice, but very short. Another great one from Bryson. This novel-length entry is dense on plot, but tosses in some good action! A page turner to see how it will turn out, I liked the almost low-key ending. Struck me reading these how much in the vein of Italo Calvino his strange stories are, and wonderfully so. One of my very favorite writers. Banks science fiction pgs Banks creates not just worlds, but universes. This novel is part of his "Culture" series. Though I got lost a time or two with the overlapping, time-lapping plot twists, was a great read with many amazing moments and ideas. Garfield Crimmins fiction, art 96pgs Some nice paintings, but many mostly boring bits of old clipart, amateur-level collage look, a clock head on a nude woman! Jacobs non-fiction, sociology pgs Jacobs continues to try out various ideas on himself in a series of short pieces: All with wit, depth and insight. Oh, and funny, too! Love how he tied all the images together, and he left the end open for further adventures of these mini-Xmen. Maybe some other day, but, for now, have other books to get to An Italo Calvino-style setting, but explored more thoroughly. Not a lot actually happens, more a collection of interesting observations and such. Not his best, but for what it is, a short and enjoyable read. Satire and commentary rolled up in a strange world, with great prose style. Less real humor, boring characters. September Fatal Attraction: Have never been disappointed reading his work. Gotta love them crazy folks! Not his best, but still a joy to read. A good writer, but this is not a favorite of mine of all his work. Lee Martinez novel, fantasy, humor pgs A great fun read: Wanted to read it all in one sitting. One of the greats for sure. A page-turner, as always. Extras include responses to reviews. Barnum, and how society responds. Even read most of the odd pages of notes at the end, which contained more wonderful information. Not as strong as his later work, but all the elements are there for a fun an inventive read. A modern slant on an often explored idea. Amazing detail, definitely an interesting life, and this is only the start of it. Titus Groan , Gormenghast , Titus Alone Fourth time to read the trilogy, once again immersed in the wonderful style and odd world Peake created in Gormenghast. First two

Saturday, January 25, 4: Tuesday, 28 January - Saturday, 1st February at 7. The Bronte sisters are a case study in repression. They were so buttoned-up in life " by time and gender " they published under male aliases. It drove their brother Branwell, underachiever painter and poet, to drink and drugs. It drives Charlotte Jane Eyre , Anne The Tenant of Wildfell Hall , and even the reluctant Emily Wuthering Heights to cross the gender divide and publish their work " and in terms of this show, to get down, get sexy, and take it off. As a metaphor for revelation, this risks sounding too obvious or literal-minded to contemporary ears to be more than cheeky. Designers Tessa Stamp set, costumes and Matt Schuurman video create lovely sepia interiors " libraries, boudoirs, interactive group portraits. The lighting sources are draped chandeliers and footlights. The performances are startlingly committed to the characters. Samantha Duff makes a wry, commanding Charlotte, who finds herself at the end of life racked by guilt. Delia Barnett is Anne, the tart-tongued and competitive one with a grievance. And Chorley is memorably tortured as the shy Emily, whose strange creativity conceals a terrible secret. Interesting stuff given a high intensity delivery by the cast, all of whom have a long list of theatrical credits. I particularly liked his creepy formal Victorian family portrait on the wall that keeps changing in reaction to what is happening on stage. Burlesque is based on come-hither glances, a seductive fourth-wall breaking commitment to carnal pleasures yet to come. The actors have to make a huge reach and, in essence, change character. But to me, the transformation demands too much. I always liked to read, and when I started writing seriously, I was in the United States, and I was doing a dissertation on 19th-century British novels, on Thomas Hardy. And two or three things happened there: And I liked the fact that they were not from fashionable places: They were not from London. One of its latest additions was Wuthering Heights: Few nineteenth-century heroines resonate with this woman like Dorothea Brooke. Amelia Thompson-Deveaux Flavorwire on dog lovers and writers: Literature has its dog lovers: Homes article about a Manhattan penthouse for rent: More relevantly, with an all-velvet red room to give Jane Eyre fans and former movie theater employees the wiggins, the penthouse is something to remember. Female First interviews the writer Catalina Dudka: You have been a book lovers since your can remember so who are your favourite? I have read those stories over and over again. Each time I read it, I savor the delicious fantasy moments, such as having an older brother grovel and repeat as a pearl of wisdom the obviously incorrect words Spinky used in an argument, the father coming out to sit and lecture Spinky armed with a pipe and a beer.

Published on July 01, I can honestly say their photographs on Facebook always make me smile. Angelo, the world famous Border Collie, and Maggie, his black Lab philosopher mix, allow him to share their off-grid home. All three tolerate The Cat who does a merely adequate job of rodent control. Leland has built the majority of the square foot all-solar home over almost four years, but is grateful to friends and neighbors who have helped with some of the heavy lifting. Welcome to you and the utterly adorable Angelo. Before we chat about your books, I have some nice easy questions for you. The picture of cool, and that leather jacket! Snoopy or Garfield Roller skates or a pogo stick? Bruce Springsteen or Leonard Cohen? Born in the USA. The way those denim pocketsâ€¦ Did you ever own a lava lamp? What was your worst fashion disaster? Mine was a purple tank top with flared brown jeans and platform shoes. Remember the movie Saturday Night Fever? Those Angel Flight pants that John Travolta wore? Yeah, I had those, and a gold chain. Never wore those things again. I have no words to follow that, Leland! Maybe we should move on. Can you tell us a short joke? I never make fun of short people. Blondes I make fun of because I am one. Oh, you mean a brief joke. A farmer had a border collie, which much to his surprise and consternation starting speaking English one day. I see Angelo is laughing at that one. What makes you laugh most? They are wonderful clowns, able to put on the saddest face while doing the silliest things. What is your happiest childhood memory? I remember being pulled in my little red wagon by a very loving and patient dog named Trixie. I got them both at about the same time, and I drove my parents mad with my listening to them over and over and over and over. Which of course is a dilemma when it comes to marketing books. Almost all of my fiction has dogs or other creatures in them. Most of them have a gay character or two. What got you into writing? I have always loved words. I learned to read at a very young age, before kindergarten, and have been reading everything ever since. My oldest brother wanted to be a writer, but sadly he passed on before he published. I think he encouraged me to think about putting pen to paper most. You have a most unusual life. Can you tell us a little about it and why you decided to become a hermit? I used to travel a lot, for both business and pleasure. I lived for a while in San Francisco and for bit in Antwerp. I lived in a very old neighborhood in Denver for about twenty years. The noises, the smells, the thoughtlessness of groups of people finally did me in, and I knew it was time to kind of return to my roots. I grew up on a farm and longed for the quiet. At about the same time, the war was going on in Iraq, and I was appalled that we were sending soldiers and Marines into areas just to secure our cheap energy sources. I vowed that I would be as energy-independent as possible, that no one would ever need to die to make sure I could turn the lights on. Over the next couple of years, I found a piece of property in the middle of a beautiful nowhere in southern Colorado, designed a house, and quit my job to build that house. How remote am I? The nearest grocery store of any size is more than thirty miles away. I would love you to tell us all about Angelo. He is such a star and you post some amazing photos of him on Facebook. Angelo is my miracle dog. When I moved down here to build, I had a beautiful little shiba inu named Suki. She and I went everywhere together. I had a small RV and we visited forty-six states together. The next morning, I woke up, and there was a black-and-white dog staring in through the window. No one knew where he came from, he just showed up out of nowhere. I put up posters and no one called. As luck would have it, I was reading a dog about a Border Collie at the time, so I had some vague idea of what the breed was like. The first day, he started proving his intelligence. He walked all over my five-acre property, finding all the toys that Suki my shiba inu had left lying around during our camping trips down here, and he deposited them on her grave. I list him as my co-author on almost everything because he disappeared for 40 days and 40 nights, and was found more than twenty-five miles from home. Where do you think up your ideas for stories? What would you most like to do on your bucket list? Write a New York Times bestseller! I learned to read upside down before I learned to read upside up. My mother and oldest brother used to read to me when I was a child, and Mother, especially, had a habit of running her finger along the words she was reading aloud to me. Leland, Angelo, it has been such a pleasure to have you here. I wish you every success with all your books. His father â€” a devout Nebraska farmer â€” visits him in the hospital and discovers they are able to communicate telepathically. Through a week of mental conversations and time travel, they revisit the events and secrets that drove them apart. A dog with two names shepherds them through the path of betrayal, abuse, and â€” eventually â€” reconciliation. Told with devastating simplicity and magic, this small novel will change the way you look at rainbows forever. Jimmy Mender and His Miracle Dog Sometimes knowing someone for just a week can change your life; enough to take a road trip from San Francisco to Alaska to understand the man in the cowboy hat, with the help of the people and the dogs who knew him.
