Its underside and rear are smooth, and it has four short legs with two claws on each foot. It has a triangular head with narrow, red eyes, two fangs protruding from its upper jaw, and small, triangular openings on the upper sides. A spiked ridge runs along its back, and it has a single short horn on the tip of its snout. The female has a shorter horn than the male. In addition to its rocky hide, its bones are a thousand times harder than human bones. When it runs, it forgets why it started and continues until it falls asleep. However, it may recall the reason upon demolishing something. Rhyhorn runs in a straight line due to its short legs making it inept at turning. It does not care if obstacles get in the way, merely smashing through them or sending them flying. Sometimes it may feel pain the day after a collision. Rhyhorn lives in rough terrain. It was used in a battle against Ash but was defeated by Bulbasaur. Although it was initially unaware of the trio, Ash rushed up to it and antagonized it. It then cornered the gang at the edge of a cliff, and attempted to charge at them, but the group was saved by Togepi using Teleport via Metronome, causing Rhyhorn to charge over the cliff. It was then rescued by Ash and his friends with the help of the resident Officer Jenny. It was used in many races when Grace was younger. Rhyhorn was used by Serena as part of her Rhyhorn training before she left home. Rhyhorn later reappeared in A Race for Home! A Rhyhorn appeared in Diancie and the Cocoon of Destruction. Rhyhorn quickly ran past the racers on the track, before going off-track and riding inside a forest. After the group got to safety, Serena thanked Rhyhorn for its help and it went back to the racing track. A Rhyhorn appeared in A Race for Home! Multiple Rhyhorn appeared in Master Class Choices! The Performers had to attract the most Rhyhorn in a certain period of time. Serena found that most of the Rhyhorn were attracted to her, allowing her to advance to the next performance. Amelia had her Shiny Dragonair and Espeon use Attract to bring them over. Two Rhyhorn appeared in the banned episode EP Ash attempted to catch one in the Safari Zone, but it got away. The second appeared in a flashback.

List of characters Eugene [1] Harold [2] Krabs [3] born November 30, [4] , simply and more commonly known as Mr. Krabs, is one of the main characters in the SpongeBob SquarePants franchise. He is voiced by Clancy Brown and first appears in the episode " Help Wanted. Krabs is a crimson red sea crab who lives in an anchor with his daughter Pearl. Krabs is extremely greedy and obsessed with money. He will freak out if anything happens to his money, except in " New Digs ," where he does not care when the money is in the pickle jar. He treats money as if it is royalty in some aspects. Krabs is mostly respected by SpongeBob, who sees him as a father figure, while Squidward tends to loathe him. The series exaggerates Mr. He will do almost anything to obtain or preserve money, no matter how small the amount, usually with no regards to the safety or well-being of others or even himself. His nemesis and business rival is Sheldon J. Plankton , who was his best friend in their respective childhoods, but now constantly attempts to steal the Krabby Patty secret formula. Contents [show] Description Mr. Krabs is short, red, portly, very tall eyestalks, a crinkled nose, large claws, and very short, pointy legs. His vertebrae are also visible on the back of his neck. He wears a light blue shirt and slackers with a black belt. A sailor or pirate ship often correlates with Mr. Many times when he appears on-screen, sea-shanty sailor music is playing. Krabs announcing the battle between Karen and Karen 2. Krabs is extremely greedy and miserly, often being portrayed as being just as bad as, if not even worse than Plankton. His only interest is to have money, and he could not care less for anybody, including his customers, employees, family, or even himself. He is prone to fits of insanity if he has to give up as much as a penny. He often goes to irrationally great lengths to acquire or to avoid losing money with little, if any, regard to the safety or well-being of others or even himself. Krabs always remembers the price for everything he has bought, which proves his greed has a strong memory. In the same episode, he forces SpongeBob to sell a contaminated patty that he found under the grill, refusing to let anything that he could potentially make money with go to waste. Ironically, this results in the Krusty Krab losing weeks of business. Additionally, he has little respect for royalty. In " Rule of Dumb ," when Patrick is believed to be the king of Bikini Bottom, Krabs allows him to eat at the Krusty Krab in the hopes of getting more money. Krabs promptly kicks Patrick out when he discovers that he never intended to pay at all, shouting, "No one eats at my restaurant for free, king or no king! He has also risen the price of food in " Truth or Square " in which it was the th anniversary of the Krusty Krab and adds an extra zero on the end of every price on the menu in hopes of getting more money. There has been at least two occasions where SpongeBob has burst into the Krusty Krab to warn him about oncoming disaster, only for him to think of it as an opportunity to try to sell them Krabby Patties. The first attempt was to an oncoming biker gang in " Born to Be Wild. In " Bummer Vacation ," SpongeBob comments that a nickel is "more than [he makes] in a year. He is also shown to abuse his employees, most notably in " Fear of a Krabby Patty ," in which he forces them to work nonstop 24 hours a day, seven days a week without rest for more than 40 days. In " Squid on Strike ," Mr. Krabs gives SpongeBob and Squidward bills instead of checks on payday, which charge them for any non work-related activity, including standing, breathing, and even existing. Krabs actually pays him in play money. His safety measures and maintenance of the restaurant are extremely poor, if not nonexistent, frequently resorting to improvised and obviously inadequate measures to avoid paying for actual insurance and repairs. In multiple episodes, Mr. Krabs takes advantage of the situation in order to make money, only to have it backfire later on. SpongeBob bought several things, including a menu, a microphone, and a light-up arrow. However, Krabs turned it down as he already made a menu made of napkins, a microphone made of tin cans on a string, and a very small fish-shaped sign, despite the fact that SpongeBob already paid for them, thus making Mr. Krabs not have to spend anything. Because of the increase in customers, he keeps knocking more holes in the walls of his restaurant until it eventually collapses. After an art appraiser tells him that the paintings of a dead artist are a lot more expensive than those of an alive artist, he sends Squidward to a series of deliveries to dangerous locations to get him killed in the process. After through luck Squidward survives all of them, including a delivery to Mars , Krabs in anger takes out a huge hammer and tries to directly kill him. Squidward in the process is forced to destroy his paintings and the art appraiser appraises the destruction. Krabs, in hopes of getting money, then destroys his own restaurant just to impress the appraiser. Krabs then gets angry, but a piece of the roof crushes him and Squidward. It is then seen that they are displaced in an art museum. Krabs can also be incredibly petty. During his schemes, he often forces SpongeBob to help him by threatening to fire him. In " Karate Choppers ," he forces SpongeBob to give up karate altogether, including outside of work, or else he would be fired. In " My Pretty Seahorse ," Mr. Krabs tells SpongeBob to not just stop bringing Mystery to work, but to get rid of her entirely, and has on many occasions forced his employees to work nonstop and told them that they could never go home, which is illegal. Despite his cruel and money-grubbing behavior, Mr. Krabs is not completely heartless. He has apologized for his actions on occasion, and he does care for his daughter Pearl, going to great lengths to acquire food for her in " Growth Spout. Additionally, in "Born Again Krabs," he struck a deal with the Flying Dutchman for a second chance at life because he is a non-cheap, generous man, something that he did very well until he discovered that he had no money in the cash register. As seen in " Little Yellow Book ," even Mr. He also shows some sort of fatherly concern towards SpongeBob and Patrick, making them promise never to go near the hooks in " Hooky " and forbidding them from using vulgar words in " Sailor Mouth.

Members of Aboriginal, Torres Strait Islander and Maori communities are advised that this catalogue contains names and images of deceased people.

He disguises himself as a boatman, pretends to ferry the protagonists across the river, and captures Tang Sanzang when they are unaware. As their names suggest, their true forms are a tiger, an elk and an antelope respectively. Sun Wukong competes with them in a contest of magic powers and lures them into meeting their respective ends: Tiger is beheaded; Elk is disemboweled; Antelope is fried in boiling oil. He terrorises the people living near the river and demands that they sacrifice a boy and a girl to him every year or he will cause flooding. He is no match for Sun Wukong and retreats back to his underwater lair. Sun Wukong learns from Guanyin later that the demon is actually a goldfish from a lotus pond at Mount Putuo who obtained his powers after listening to Guanyin reciting the scriptures every day. Guanyin uses a fish basket to trap the demon and bring him back to the pond. He captures Tang Sanzang and his companions except for Sun Wukong. The demon is eventually subdued and taken back by Taishang Laojun. Ruyi holds a grudge against Sun Wukong because of the fate of his nephew, Red Boy, and he behaves in a hostile manner when Sun comes to ask for water from the spring. Ruyi is eventually outwitted and defeated by Sun Wukong. When the protagonists arrive in her country, she falls in love with Tang Sanzang and wants to marry him. Her true form is a scorpion the size of a pipa. She practises Taoist arts for several years and obtains magical powers. The Buddha suffers from the pain of the sting and instructs his followers to bring the scorpion to him but she has already fled. Sun Wukong and Zhu Bajie fight with the scorpion but are held back by her poisonous sting. He fights with the real Sun Wukong and neither of them is able to overcome his opponent. No one is able to differentiate between the real and the fake Sun Wukong until the two appear before the Buddha, who tells them about the four spiritual primates. The Six Eared Macaque attempts to flee when he hears the Buddha speak about his true identity but the Buddha traps him under a giant golden alms bowl. The macaque is then killed by Sun Wukong. In the early chapters of the novel, he becomes sworn brothers with Sun Wukong and five other demon kings. He appears again in a later chapter when the protagonists arrive at the Flaming Mountains along their journey. In the ensuing fight against Sun Wukong and Zhu Bajie, Bull Demon King reveals his true form, a giant white bull, and attempts to charge towards his opponents. Her true form is a vixen. She is killed by Zhu Bajie. It is taken away by Sun Wukong. Sun Wukong uncovers the truth when he and his companions arrive in Jisai. The dragon king and his family are eventually killed by Sun Wukong and Zhu Bajie. Sun Wukong enlists the help of celestial forces to deal with the demons. She is slain by Zhu Bajie. Their respective forms are a sheatfish and a blackfish respectively. Sun Wukong discovers them while cleaning the pagoda and captures them. Their true forms are a pine tree, a cedar tree, a juniper tree and a bamboo tree respectively. Tang Sanzang encounters them in the temple and discusses poetry with them. Sun Wukong sees through their disguise and tells Zhu Bajie when the latter asks him if he detects any demons in the vicinity. Zhu Bajie then destroys all the trees. Tang Sanzang is shocked and he scolds Zhu Bajie for killing innocents because the spirits never harmed him, but Sun Wukong explains that it is best to eliminate the spirits now in case they become evil in the future. Tang Sanzang, Zhu Bajie and Sha Wujing fall for his ruse as they mistakenly believe that they have reached their destination, and are captured by him. Sun Wukong escapes later and brings various divine forces to help him counter the demon but Yellow Brows uses the Human Sack to trap all the reinforcements. At the critical moment, Maitreya shows up and suggests to Sun Wukong to transform into a watermelon. The unsuspecting Yellow Brows eats the watermelon and Sun Wukong causes agony to the demon inside his stomach. Yellow Brows surrenders and is eventually taken back by Maitreya. He is armed with a pair of spears. His true form is a giant python with red scales and glowing eyes. He has eaten many people and animals living in that area. He meets his end when Sun Wukong enters his body and breaks out of his stomach. Sun Wukong uses tricks to steal the bells from Sai Tai Sui and then uses them against the demon. The demon is eventually subdued and taken back by Guanyin. As their names suggest, their true forms are spiders. Tang Sanzang stumbles upon their thatched hut while begging for alms and tries to leave after suspecting that they are demons. However, it is too late as the demons emit spider silk from their navels and spin a web to trap Tang Sanzang. They are defeated by Sun Wukong later and have no choice but to release Tang Sanzang. The spiders are later squashed to death by Sun Wukong. He has a thousand eyes that radiate brilliant golden light to confuse his enemies and victims. The spiders approach him for help in taking revenge after their defeat at the hands of Sun Wukong. He offers the protagonists poisoned drinks when they stop for a rest at his temple but Sun Wukong sees through his ruse. He seizes Tang Sanzang and holds him hostage, while Sun Wukong captures the seven spiders. He refuses to exchange Tang Sanzang for his juniors and Sun Wukong kills the spiders in anger. He is armed with a bronze saber. He is capable of transforming himself into several times bigger or smaller than his normal size. It is said that he once showed up uninvited at a peach feast hosted by the Queen Mother of the West and wanted to fight for the rulership of Heaven. The Jade Emperor sent , celestial troops to capture the demon, who turned into a giant monster and devoured the entire army in one gulp. The Azure Lion swallows Sun Wukong, who causes trouble inside his stomach. The Lion then pretends to agree to open his mouth and let Sun Wukong out, but intends to bite him to death when he comes out. However, Sun Wukong sticks out his weapon instead and the demon breaks his teeth after biting on the staff. The Azure Lion is eventually subdued and taken back by Manjusri. He appears as a giant with an elephant-like face, and is armed with a spear. He has a long nose capable of trapping enemies and crushing them. While fighting with Zhu Bajie, he uses his nose to wrap around him and capture him. He is eventually subdued and taken back by Samantabhadra. After a while, the victim trapped inside the flask will be reduced to a bloody mash. He uses the flask to trap Sun Wukong but the latter breaks out and the flask is rendered useless because its essence has been spilt. The Buddha shows up to subdue the demon and take him back to Vulture Peak. The king then issues an order to capture 1, children and imprison them in cages. She was captured by Li Jing and Nezha , and was supposed to be killed, but the Buddha told them to spare her life, and she was so grateful that she acknowledged Li Jing as her godfather and Nezha as her godbrother. She is armed with a pair of swords. Tang Sanzang takes pity on her and lets her accompany them to a nearby temple, but Sun Wukong sees through her cover. She ate six monks in the temple and captures Tang Sanzang when Sun Wukong and the others are distracted. Sun Wukong finds out her true identity later and brings Li Jing and Nezha to subdue her and take her back to Heaven. He has already killed 9, monks when the protagonists arrive in Miefu. To evade trouble, the protagonists disguise themselves as horse traders and hide in a big cupboard in an inn. However, that night, the cupboard is stolen by thieves but is recovered by the authorities and brought to the court. Sun Wukong cast sleeping spells on the royal household and officials and shaved their heads. The next morning, the king wakes up and is shocked to see that he, his family members, and his subjects are bald, just like Buddhist monks. He is less powerful than other demons in the novel, but is considered one of the wittiest. Sun Wukong infiltrates his lair and casts a sleeping spell on the demon and his minions and saves Tang Sanzang. The demon is slain by Zhu Bajie just as he awakes, and his true form is revealed to be a leopard with mugwort-shaped patterns on its body. The boy in charge of looking after the lion once secretly drank a special potion and fell asleep for three days in Heaven equivalent to three years in the human world. The lion seizes the opportunity to escape. The lion demons living around that area revere him as their grand ancestor. He is angered when he learns that his god-grandson, the Tawny Lion Demon, has been killed by Sun Wukong, and wants to take revenge. He is eventually subdued by Taiyi Jiuku Tianzun and taken back to Heaven. He is a god-grandson of the Nine Headed Lion. Sun Wukong and his companions attack his cave and slaughter him and his minions to take back their weapons. His death is the catalyst for the conflict between the protagonists and the Nine Headed Lion. They honour the Nine Headed Lion as their grand ancestor. They are captured by Sun Wukong and his companions and executed. They are armed with a battleaxe, a broadsword, and a rattan staff respectively.

Rhinoceros, commonly abbreviated to Rhino, is one of any five extant species of odd-toed ungulates in the family Rhinocerotidae, as well as any of the numerous extinct species.

A stampede of Elephants and Rhinos! But good luck trying to outrun them! Even an Elephant can run almost 15 miles per hour! And Rhinos are faster than Elephants! And do you hear that snorting sound? That means that the Rhino is really upset! Rhinoceroses are, generally, solitary animals that prefer to live an independent life. White Rhinos tend to be a little more social. However, they all demand their own territories, particularly the males of the species. In order to ensure that they can secure their territory, certain behaviour has been established. This behaviour is sometimes aggressive, and sometimes displayed merely as a warning. In order to scare off intruders, rhinos will usually charge at them. Because their eyesight is not at all good, this is a blind charge and can even lead to them running straight into a tree or other foliage. When running, a rhino can reach speeds of about 55 kilometres per hour or around 35 miles per hour. The Rhinoceros has a reputation for being an extremely aggressive animal, since they attack out of fear, confusion and panic. Due to their very poor eyesight they will charge at anything that surprises them if they sense a threat. They have even been observed to charge tree trunks and termite mounds. Their natural strength and wild animal fury make them very dangerous Jumanji animals. As the rumble increases, a herd of Rhinos stampede into the living room and dining room, where they charge and destroy all the furniture and china in their path. The Rhinos and the damage they made disappear when the game is completed. The stampede wrecks the Parrish mansion and eventually they reach town, causing mass hysteria in their path and nearly crushing Peter Shepherd inside the abandoned car. The stampede later spook Nora Shepherd on her way home, witnessing one particular Rhino struggling to keep up with the other animals. This blocks the player from moving normally. If the player rolls an even number, he can go around the Rhino. Rolling a Rope on the rescue die within 5 seconds will defeat the Rhino threat. Each Jigsaw has a different style but all three have pieces each. Against a jungle green background, the bronze zig-zag binds the stylised portraits of Van Pelt, a Monkey, a Rhinoceros and an Elephant against deep jungles, the vast lake and volcanic activity all unified by the speared Jumanji name. Jumanji Animals A collection of different Jumanji animals that appeared in the film. Tiny Bites Rhino Totem: The player controls Judy Shepard, alone in the dark attic, swatting away bats and mosquitoes with a tennis racquet, while avoiding spiders, which eat the other enemies but can also harm the player. Some Rhinos shown to possess sharp pointed teeth, even though they are herbivores. Rhinos would tend to act on their own accord and charge at anything that agitated them, but they could be scared off by witnessing the glowing dice when taken into the game by Alan, backing away while demonstrating futile shows of aggression. A Rhino backs away from the dice. As well as having mounted Rhino heads in his Lodge, Van Pelt had at least one stuffed Rhinoceros on display in his living room. Van Pelt regretted not being able to take the animal home because of its size and had to settle for the horn as his trophy, gaining a sentimental attachment to the horn and was furious when it was stolen from him. However, this was not the case as he was ambushed by one after explaining its value to his enemies. The robber Jack later ended up being chased by the Juroceros after stealing the chest containing the horn after he incorrectly believed it contained emeralds. In a desperate bid to save himself and Tribal Bob, Peter held out his t-shirt like a bull-fighter and successfully blinded the Rhino into falling right off, narrowly missing Alan Parrish and the talking Manji key below, referring to it as a "Sky Rhino". The Rhino portrait on the leaflet. Although the LCD Game uses characters and art-styles from the animated series, the Rhinoceros portrait from the Milton Bradley Board Game appears on the front cover of the packing leaflet of the Hasbro LCD Jumanji game, but does not actually appear in the game itself. In the film, a herd of Rhinos act as the hazard of the Canyon level. Bravestone Spencer noticed that Finbar Fridge had two lives left and threw him out of the chopper to distract the Rhino crash while Bravestone Spencer retrieved the Jewel, knowing that the Rhino herd would pursue and quickly trample Finbar Fridge to death, allowing him to re-spawn, enter from high above and land in the chopper to safety. After the players escaped the game and return to the real world, they destroyed the Jumanji computer game using a Rhino brand bowling ball. In the closing credits, an illustration of a stampede of Rhinos appears on the Map of Jumanji, next to the credited director of photography Gyula Pados, HSC. Rhino Run On the official site of Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle , the namesake game Rhino Run has Rhinoceroses as dangerous hazards. They appear randomly on the fixed routes and can only be avoided but can also be passed through when the characters ride an Elephant when picking up a powerup. As playable characters pass through levels, the game speed increases and makes Rhinos and other hazards even harder to avoid.

The white rhinoceros is actually grey The black rhinoceros has a beak shaped lip and is similar in color to the white rhinoceros The Indian rhinoceros has a single horn Smaller in size than the Indian rhinoceros, the Javan rhinoceros also has a single horn The Sumatran rhinoceros is the smallest of the rhino species Main article: White rhinoceros There are two subspecies of white rhinoceros: As of , the southern subspecies has a wild population of 20, making them the most abundant rhino subspecies in the world. However, the northern subspecies is critically endangered, with all that is known to remain being two captive females. There is no conclusive explanation of the name "white rhinoceros". A popular idea that "white" is a distortion of either the Afrikaans word wyd or the Dutch word wijd or its other possible spellings whyde, weit, etc. The head-and-body length is 3. On its snout it has two horns. The white rhinoceros also has a prominent muscular hump that supports its relatively large head. The colour of this animal can range from yellowish brown to slate grey. Most of its body hair is found on the ear fringes and tail bristles, with the rest distributed rather sparsely over the rest of the body. White rhinos have the distinctive flat broad mouth that is used for grazing. Black rhinoceros The name "black rhinoceros" Diceros bicornis was chosen to distinguish this species from the white rhinoceros Ceratotherium simum. This can be confusing, as the two species are not truly distinguishable by color. There are four subspecies of black rhino: South-central Diceros bicornis minor , the most numerous, which once ranged from central Tanzania south through Zambia , Zimbabwe and Mozambique to northern and eastern South Africa ; South-western Diceros bicornis occidentalis which are better adapted to the arid and semi-arid savannas of Namibia , southern Angola , western Botswana and western South Africa; East African Diceros bicornis michaeli , primarily in Tanzania ; and West African Diceros bicornis longipes which was declared extinct in November Sometimes, a third smaller horn may develop. During the latter half of the 20th century, their numbers were severely reduced from an estimated 70, [16] in the late s to a record low of 2, in Since then, numbers have been steadily increasing at a continental level with numbers doubling to 4, by the end of Its thick, silver-brown skin folds into the shoulder, back, and rump, giving it an armored appearance. Its upper legs and shoulders are covered in wart-like bumps, and it has very little body hair. Shoulder height is 1. However, because of human influence, they now exist in only several protected areas of India in Assam , West Bengal , and a few pairs in Uttar Pradesh and Nepal , plus a few pairs in Lal Suhanra National Park in Pakistan. They are confined to the tall grasslands and forests in the foothills of the Himalayas. Javan rhinoceros The Javan rhinoceros Rhinoceros sondaicus is one of the most endangered large mammals in the world. It is also the least known rhino species. Like the closely related, and larger, Indian rhinoceros , the Javan rhino has a single horn. Its hairless, hazy gray skin falls into folds into the shoulder, back, and rump, giving it an armored appearance. Its length reaches 3. Though once widespread throughout Asia, by the s they were nearly hunted to extinction in Nepal , India , Burma , Peninsular Malaysia , and Sumatra for the supposed medical powers of their horns and blood. The last known Javan rhino in Vietnam was reportedly killed for its horn in by Vietnamese poachers. Now only Java contains the last Javan rhinos. Sumatran rhinoceros The Sumatran rhinoceros Dicerorhinus sumatrensis is the smallest extant rhinoceros species, as well as the one with the most hair. It can be found at very high altitudes in Borneo and Sumatra. Due to habitat loss and poaching , their numbers have declined and it has become the most threatened rhinoceros. About Sumatran rhinos are believed to remain. There are three subspecies of Sumatran rhinoceros: A mature rhino typically stands about 1. Like the African species, it has two horns; the larger is the front 25–79 centimetres 9. Males have much larger horns than the females. Hair can range from dense the densest hair in young calves to sparse. The color of these rhinos is reddish brown. The body is short and has stubby legs. The lip is prehensile. Sumatran rhinoceros are on the verge of extinction due to loss of habitat and illegal hunting. Once they were spread across South-east Asia, but now they are confined to several parts of Indonesia and Malaysia due to reproductive isolation. There were D. It has been found through DNA comparison that the Sumatran rhinoceros is the most ancient extant rhinoceros and related to the extinct Eurasian woolly rhino species, Coelodonta. In Alan Rabinowitz publicly denounced governments, NGOs, and other institutions for lacking in their attempts to conserve the Sumatran rhinoceros. To conserve it, they would have to relocate them from small forests to breeding programs that could monitor their breeding success. To boost reproduction, the Malaysian and Indonesian governments could also agree to exchange the gametes of the Sumatran and smaller Bornean subspecies. The Indonesian and Malaysian governments have also proposed a single management unit for these two ancient subspecies. Fossils of Hyrachyus eximus found in North America date to this period. This small hornless ancestor resembled a tapir or small horse more than a rhino. Three families, sometimes grouped together as the superfamily Rhinocerotidae, evolved in the late Eocene, namely the Hyracodontidae, Amarynodontidae and Rhinocerotidae. Hyracodontidae Hyracodontidae, also known as "running rhinos", showed adaptations for speed, and would have looked more like horses than modern rhinos. The smallest hyracodontids were dog-sized; the largest was Paraceratherium, one of the largest known land mammals that ever existed. The hornless Paraceratherium was almost seven metres high, ten metres long, and weighed as much as 15 tons. Like a giraffe, it ate leaves from trees. Hyracodontids spread across Eurasia from the mid-Eocene to early Miocene. Amarynodontidae The Amarynodontidae, also known as "aquatic rhinos", dispersed across North America and Eurasia, from the late Eocene to early Oligocene. The amarynodontids were hippopotamus-like in their ecology and appearance, inhabiting rivers and lakes, and sharing many of the same adaptations to aquatic life as hippos. Rhinocerotidae[edit] The family of all modern rhinoceros, the Rhinocerotidae, first appeared in the Late Eocene in Eurasia. The earliest members of Rhinocerotidae were small and numerous; at least 26 genera lived in Eurasia and North America until a wave of extinctions in the middle Oligocene wiped out most of the smaller species. However, several independent lineages survived. Menoceras, a pig-sized rhinoceros, had two horns side-by-side. The North American Teleoceras had short legs, a barrel chest and lived until about 5 million years ago. The last rhinos in the Americas became extinct during the Pliocene. Modern rhinos are thought to have begun dispersal from Asia during the Miocene. Two species survived the most recent period of glaciation and inhabited Europe as recently as 10,000 years ago: The woolly rhinoceros appeared in China around 1 million years ago and first arrived in Europe around 400,000 years ago. It reappeared 20,000 years ago, alongside the woolly mammoth, and became numerous. Elasmotherium was two meters tall, five meters long and weighed around five tons, with a single enormous horn, hypsodont teeth and long legs for running. Both the Coelodonta and Elasmotherium survived through the late Pleistocene when climate fluctuations, increased predation by newer predators such as hyenas and human hunting led to their extinction. The Sumatran rhino was closely related to the woolly rhinoceros, but not to the other modern species. The Indian and Javan rhinos are closely related and form a more recent lineage of Asian rhino. The ancestors of early Indian and Javan rhino diverged 2.4 million years ago. The lineages containing the living species diverged by the early Pliocene 1.

The Rhino can be drilled using the standard drilling techniques developed for symmetric bowling balls. Lightweight Engineering: At Brunswick, the unique core shape of each individual ball is used.

Chapter 9 : Rhinoceros - Wikipedia

*The Indian rhinoceros, or greater one-horned rhinoceros, (Rhinoceros unicornis) has a single horn 20 to 60 cm long. It is nearly as large as the African white rhino. Its thick, silver-brown skin folds into the shoulder, back, and rump, giving it an armored appearance.*
