Kristen 6 Comments Whether your goal for teaching voice lessons is to have a full-time voice studio or to teach lessons to supplement your performance career, you need to start somewhere. Perhaps there is no experience as exhilarating yet daunting as teaching your very first lesson to a brand new student. The trick to the first voice lesson is how to jump in without overwhelming yourself or your student. Furthermore, how you run your first lesson will depend a bit upon the length of the lesson. That way, if you run out of time for any of the steps, you did the most important ones first anyway. Getting to know you If you were really worried about time, you could theoretically do this step before you start the lesson. However, I prefer to do this step in person. This step is also helpful if you teach at a music school, or some location where students are assigned to you. In these situations, this is probably the first time you are speaking to the student directly. This step is the time to ask questions and get to know your new student. Keep reading this post to learn more about how to use the second half of the sheet. This is a good time to go over a syllabus or studio policy if you have one more on that at the end of this post. I like to encourage them to ask questions at this point, and at any point in the future of their voice lessons as well. Listen to the voice This could go in two directions. First, you could ask them to sing a song they brought with advanced notice, or have them sing a standard, well-known song. Or second, you could do what I do and dive into vocal warm ups here. However, as you will see, I do have them sing a song if time allows it. In the first lesson, I like to cover the basics of good posture and breathing if the student is brand new to singing. This is where you can guide them through how vocal exercises go while also privately assessing them. However, an hour lesson would definitely allow for time to sing a song. I do this because letting them choose makes them feel more comfortable. Their selection also gives me a sense of how the student sees their voice, their goals, and their talent. Asking these kinds of questions about their comfort level not only helps the student feel in control, it also gives me a sense of what kind of student they will be shy, outgoing, easygoing, analytical, etc. Based on how they did in the exercises, my suggestions for a song may vary. I also will play this song along with them to support them and to see what kind of piano support is helpful or not helpful to this student. After your first lesson, pat yourself on the back and take some notes. Again, the worksheet here is designed to help you assess your new student, decide on repertoire assignments and technical goals for them, and remember any thoughts you initially had as your lessons progress. Furthermore, if this post has given you courage to get your own voice studio started, you can subscribe at this link only to receive a guide on creating your very own studio policy. Consume More Water Drinking clean water can enhance the strength of your throat, which is imperative for singers. Since you are singing, many chords are involved in the singing processes. Lubricating is one major part of obtaining frictionless movement of the throat. You have to lubricate them to avoid tension and other injuries. The problem is that there is friction on the move and can even hurt the wires connectivity of your throat. Therefore, with enough water during the day can prevent such injuries. Also, keep in mind that water has the best effect to enhance voice brilliance. No coffee or even tea, but in such cases water should be used. So use this tip if you are wondering how to have a good voice.

Warm Up Before Singing You should understand that the way your muscles function is similar to that of your vocal chords: During warm-up, we suggest you take indoor or outdoor exercises that involve breathing. This way you draw the walls of your throats to relax and contract. In addition, you can also practice singing a few simple songs based on several notes without huge tuning fork. Do not starts driving at incredible speed immediately, start at a slower pace and gradually change. Keep Correct Posture You have to stand properly while singing. Without bending the shoulders, maintain an upright position and keep everything inside as possible. Meanwhile, you also have to remember not to sing in the throat. If you feel your throat is painful after singing, it is an indication that you have not sung properly. You have to sing through the diaphragm. The chanting process takes a break between relaxing and balancing your abdomen. Some people also recommend mild exercises while training your vocal cords. They say that special attention should be paid to abdominal and back which is true because all strength use in sending voice out of your mouth comes from you back and abdomen. You can look for tips on proper exercises later and see what you can do to keep your throat in good condition

Learn how to Breathe from the Diaphragm Proper breathing is one of the most important things in singing. When you breathe, be sure to take the air out of your diaphragm instead of your chest. That means that when you breathe, your belly will grow instead of your chest. Supporting your diaphragm voice is one of the chanting keys to make a good vocal. For example, put your hand on your belly and inhale your air through your nose. You should expect your stomach prolonged and penetrated when you breathe. The chest should not move outward or upward by stretching, pushing and contracting the abdominal muscles. Practice this continually until your singing mode is perfect.

Open Your Vowels The quick way to improve your singing is to open your vowels. This is called open throat technique. Expand your mouth without enlarging. Your aim is to separate the language from your soft palette and keep them separate as you sing. Your tongue should be against your lower jaw. This gives you better quality. Your jaw should not be closed in either of these. If you cannot keep the forearm, lower your fingers. Continue to repeat the vowel until you can open them. Keep your jaw open as you sing as you did when you said that. Then sing the phrase and open the jaw while you sing each vowel. This will probably require some practice to be achieved, but it will help you improve the quality of your singing. So you can begin to develop your voice.

Make Everywhere Your Stage Practice is perfect. This is perfectly related here, because the more you sing, the better chords you get. Therefore, it is a good idea to sing simple songs by showering or singing your favourite songs while walking around the neighbourhood. This way you can train your throat and learn to take notes that you could never think of. So do not lose this opportunity and practice whenever you can. Now that you know how healthy and well-trained your throat could be, hold these tips to train your voice and apply them for better results.

Knead your Chin When you sing more notes and try to gain strength, hold down the toe down. Your head tends to move up as you sing more notes, which can cause problems in your vocal tunes. Chanting with beard helps your voice to have more power and control. Extend your Vocal Range First, you have to find your vocal range. After that, you can begin to increase the vocal range. To do this, you need to have the right technique.
