The catalogue of U. Games Systems says about this deck: The art is done in excellent drawings, with as prevalent colours oranges, blues, purples and turquoises. A connoisseur of Art Nouveau would certainly deny this because only the pip cards show some resemblance with just a very specific form of art nouveau: Tiffany stained glass lamps. This is unimportant though. The drawings are all pieces of art of very high quality therefore it is a pity the deck is not an inch larger! The use of colour is sublime and artwise this is one of my favourite decks. I realize though this is a matter of personal taste. A lot of the men have long, wavy hair. Major Arcana All majors have a roman number on the top and the card title on the bottom. Justice is eight, Strength is eleven. To mention a few: The Fool is chasing a butterfly, trying to catch it with his bare hands. His motley costume swirls around him, bells clinging as he runs. His carefree face is radiant with joy and innocence. The Magician is charming eight floating objects in the air before him. The symbols are those of the four suits and symbolic animals for the four elements: The Priest is shown without the usual disciples or monks; he stands alone in a chapel in deep prayer, face tilted up toward the heavens. A symbol of the holy trinity in this case three interwoven rings appears several times. The whole image invokes the question: He has reins but does not make use of them. The car is being pulled by two quarreling eagles. Strength is pictured as a young woman sitting under oak trees, leaning comfortably against a lion that quietly sits behind her. His tail gently curls up over her legs. The young lady contemplates an acorn in the palm of her hand. Death is the most uncanny image of all - a cheerfully hip-swaying skeleton is cutting a field of flowers. Some threads of worn clothes are still attached to the skeleton and blow gently in the wind
