Activities 71 Introduction On that last December night in , Casablanca airport was dark and full of recent memories. This story begins where the movie, Casablanca, ends. The Moroccan city was, at that time, famous for its visitors. These included criminals, but also people who wanted to escape from the Germans. The lucky ones were able to get documents that allowed them to travel to Lisbon, and from there to America. Victor Laszlo and his wife, Ilsa, have just left for Lisbon to join the fight for the freedom of Europe. Three men are at the airport. Rick Blaine is an American club owner. He has had a love affair with Ilsa, and he has just shot a German officer to help her on her way. Sam Waters is an American pianist who works for Rick. Captain Louis Renault is chief of the French police in Casablanca. This book also tells the story of Rick's past. In New York in the s, he lived in a violent world of guns and gangsters, and there he met Lois, the first love of his life. Michael Walsh, the writer of As Time Goes By, wrote about music for Time magazine for sixteen years before he became a professor of journalism. As Time Goes By is his second work of fiction. Michael Walsh was interested in the past and the future of the characters in Casablanca, and he tells a very exciting story.

Chapter 1 Goodbye Casablanca The smoke from the gun had cleared, but the fog had not. The noise of the police cars disappeared, and the silence between the two men was interrupted only by the sound of the wind. On that last December night in , Casablanca airport was dark and full of recent memories. Although Louis was in his usual unsure state of mind, the tall, thin, hard-faced American felt a new and strange sense of calm and certainty about what he had just done and what he was going to do. Now he was going to follow them to join the European resistance against the Germans. Captain Louis Renault, short, sharp as always in his black French Chief of Police uniform, was walking softly; he always preferred, if possible, to leave no mark on his surroundings. He turned to Rick. I cannot imagine why you decided to help them. Miss Lund is an unusually beautiful woman! Louis loved all women, and, of course, money. Rick looked down at the little man. But suddenly there it was: As they got closer to it, they could see Sam at the wheel. We have to be at Port Lyautey before morning light. Sam Waters put his foot down and the car sped into the night. Their three guns were out of sight. They just need a signature, which fortunately is still my responsibility as well. Rick took out a bottle, drank, and offered it to Louis. Sam had many fine qualities. He was loyal, the best black pianist and singer in Casablanca in fact the best, black or white , an excellent fisherman, a wonderful cook, and not a bad driver. He put it away and took out a cigarette. Sam had given it to him before he left the club for the airport, before he killed Strasser. He lit the cigarette and remembered her words: My dearest Richard, If you are reading this letter, it means that I have escaped with Victor You must believe me When we met before in Paris, I thought Victor was dead I never questioned the fact that I was free to love you. Some women search all their lives for a man to love. I have found two. I cannot be sure that we shall meet again. But unlike last time, I can hope In Lisbon we shall stay at the Hotel Aviz. Please come if you can. If not for me, then for Victor. We both need you. Louis and Rick turned, and through the fog they saw a pair of yellow lights. A bullet hit the back of their car. Rick reached across the seat for his gun. Sam was slowly increasing the distance between the cars. Better to be behind them than in front. When there were about three hundred meters between the 3 cars, Sam showed his real driving ability. He suddenly drove the car off the road and pulled it around in a complete circle. Rick fired at the passing car. The gunman sent two wild shots into the air, and then the final explosion came. An enormous orange ball of flame shot up into the sky. When are you going to tell me? We have to catch an airplane. Rick and Louis were left to their thoughts in the back seat. Louis thought about himself. Was it only two days? A lot had happened in those two days. He thought he knew the answer. They had arrived at Lyautey. Rick could not get Ilsa out of his mind. He thought about Lois, too, before the car stopped at the airfield. Lois had been his first love, but New York seemed a long way away and a long time ago. He was on a train, riding from his mothers apartment to a downtown store which sold her favorite Jewish food. Rick lived alone and had a number of jobs. He dreamed of running his own club one day. Everything about nightlife was attractive to him. He came alive at night: He wanted other people to think he was a hard young man. But he traveled across the city every week to get his mother something special to eat on the weekend. Opposite him on the train was a very pretty young woman, about eighteen years old. She was the most beautiful girl he had ever seen, with long black hair and smooth white skin. It was even hotter than usual that summer, and, as Rick was looking at her, she fainted and fell to the floor. He jumped up to help her. It was another kilometer before she opened her eyes. They were the most beautiful eyes of pure blue. Rick forgot his stop. She turned her head and looked into his face. They got out at the next stop and walked back. What do you do? My father has jobs for people. Solly Horowitz was one of the most successful gangsters in all of New York. He owned several night clubs and ran a number of other businesses. It was important that the police looked the other way, and Solly had plenty of experience in helping them. In fact, Rick wanted to be Solly some day! They arrived at the Horowitz apartment. He was short and wide, not fat but powerful. He wore an old blue suit, a white shirt with the top button undone, and a tie hanging loosely. It was a big, loud tie with bright flowers. Maybe the little yellow ones were bits of egg from his breakfast.
