How Aussie is that? And yes, expansive means that Legend Acoustics offers a variety of options of all sizes many in both passive and active configurations. In the pouch Dr Crawford delivered the units personally and set-up the DEQX according to measurements taken with a calibrated microphone. The process is quite straightforward and will take no more than 15 minutes. Pedants can take more measurements and more time but perhaps very little added value may be wrung from that exertion – the DEQX is very precise as long as the microphone is well-placed within the listening position. For the purpose of this review, Dr Crawford pre-programmed three different EQ curves and a bypass option. These can be switched at the flick of a button via the comprehensive remote control provided with the DEQX. The Big Red Actives BRAs are a 3-way featuring an Eton Germany Magnesium alloy ceramic-coated tweeter of extremely low distortion and chosen for its neutrality throughout its wide bandwidth. The crucial midrange is handled via a 4 inch SB Acoustics aluminium midrange with underhung voice coil, said to possess extremely low distortion due to remaining pistonically well above the 3kHz suggested crossover point. Finally, a SEAS 10 inch high power high excursion driver handles the low frequencies. This heavy 10kg driver features a massive magnet system, an aluminium cast frame and a large 56mm 4-layer voice coil. Cone excursion is said to be up to 56mm which, combined with the pistonic operation and low distortion makes for powerful bass registers. So, given all the available hardware and software on board the DEQX and the versatility of the amplified speaker as a system, the only requirement from the end user is the source. The BRAs are available in two real wood veneer finishes, a light oak and a reddish jarrah. A lacquer is applied providing a semi-gloss lustre. Also provided are a full sculpted grille or, if you like your speakers semi-naked, a single round grille covers the woofer while the mid and tweeter drivers are left a la naturel. So effective is the DEQX room tuning that moving the speakers about would be an exercise in wasted energy and a potential back ache. In the case of the BRAs, with the in-built amplification precisely dedicated to wringing the very best from all the drivers – perhaps most notably from that superb incher – the potential in-room results could be revelatory. And that is one of uncompromising neutrality and seemingly unbending observance to accuracy. This is a clean sound that neither sweetens nor brightens the presentation things that could be added via the DEQX, should you wish to. This should not be misinterpreted as the BRAs being boring or over de-sensitised. In fact, quite opposite. The sound has a quickness and startling attack in terms of both transient information and overall dynamic expression. And obviously notable is the extraordinary low level resolution of nuance and micro-dynamics. The BRAs were equally subtle in the tonal and harmonic recreation of hammer on string and vicious in the handling of the powerful drum attacks. The bass notes were delineated against the musical onslaught and defined in terms of detail. The Ncore amplifiers are not only able to provide superb dynamics but they are also very adept at providing tonal and harmonic information to the dedicated drivers. The BRAs cover the entire frequency span of the cello accurately, dipping to the lowest notes while instantly surging to the opposing end of the scale my estimate roughly from 30Hz to 8kHz if you include lower and upper harmonics. Of course all this low distortion and resolution provides benefits in terms of instrument separation and immediacy in vocals. Ditto for his softer articulations with his voice, his piano, harmonica and, again, the hard-strummed guitar throughout the album. Conclusion On paper, and often in practice, the concept of an active speaker makes absolute sense and has great potential to surpass passive designs. Especially when it comes to detail and dynamics. Are you a strict accuracy-at-all-costs guy? Or do you crave a tad of nutritious sweet syrup to your musical fare? What more can a music lover ask for? Chapter 3 : Large Red Button - Official Wizard of Legend Wiki

Legend of Big Red Man o' War never won the Triple Crown, but staked his claim to the title of greatest horse in history. Getty Images. There was no such thing as a.

By Lindsey Fisher June 04, Big Red is a name that brings respect and awe from muscle car fans of every generation, and one that has struck fear in those exotic tuner types for the last twenty plus years. Covered and praised by practically every muscle car, Chevy, pro-touring and hot rod magazine in the country, Big Red is the epitome of a legend- boisterous, unruly and straight up bad right down to the very bolts that hold it together. But before the film is released later this year, we wanted to go back to where the legend of Big Red began, recap it for those of you who have watched the famous red Camaro slaughter its competition since the 80s, and bring to light the legend that is Big Red. The Legend Begins The legend of Big Red started back in when Dan Gottlieb and his son RJ set out to create the baddest muscle car alive; one that would beat any road-worthy production car in existence. It was also about him and his father getting into racing together. The original Big Red is seen here prepping for an event. While Big Red has been rebuilt since, it still resembles much of what the original looked like. After starting third in the race, Big Red quickly caught up to the first and second place vehicles, which each started a minute apart to prevent any kind of accidents caused by passing on the course. The End Of An Era? Holding onto the lead at over mph, something went wrong and the car swerved off the road and crashed, ending in a heap of twisted metal. The damage obtained by Big Red in the accident was tragic, but both RJ Gottlieb and Chris Kaufmann were lucky enough to walk away unscathed. The second build of Big Red used a sturdier stock car tube chassis rather than a stock Camaro chassis. It captures the middle ground. Big Red 2 made its glorious return to racing just months after the accident, showing race enthusiasts what the rebuilt car could do with three consecutive wins at the La Carrera Road Race. In addition to the tube chassis, Big Red was fitted with its original all-aluminum, dry-sump ci Donovan engine that was overhauled by Larry Mollicone. Dyno tests of this engine showed hp and ft-lbs of torque were capable of being produced without the need of any forced induction. Big Red also received Koni coilovers and shocks, a 9-inch Detroit Locker rearend, fuel cell, Jerrico four-speed transmission and twin-caliper vented disc brakes. With a few tweaks along the way, the second Big Red Camaro went on to make history. The legendary red Camaro also proved to be the talk of the town at the second Silver State Classic Challenge in On a mile stretch of highway running between Lund and Hiko, Nevada, Big Red caused a stir that year. With a minute second race time, an average speed of At just 19 years old, RJ Gottlieb set the record for Silver State that competitors still try to top today. The following year, Big Red took the title at the Silver State Classic again, this time averaging Paired up against highly modified production cars like a big-block Iroc-Z, boosted 20th Anniversary Trans Am, twin-turbo Testarossa and an AC Cobra, Big Red did what it does best, slaughtering the competition with a mph trap speed. Big Red posted up an amazing mph top speed. Big Red was officially a legend and everyone could recognize it. Large displacement, big brake, wide tire-wielding copycats started showing up left and right and the pro-touring movement began. After RJ got more involved in Super Production racing, Big Red was sent to the Laughlin, Nevada car museum in , where it sat on display for eight years. However, in , the Gottliebs decided it was time for Big Red to shine again and they started a full rebuild of the car. With a fresh new red and white paint job from Mike Face Auto Paint, Big Red was ready to take on another generation of hot rods, supercars and pro-touring beasts. Packing A Punch Since its second rebirth, Big Red has seen many engine and suspension upgrades, ultimately equipping the car with upwards of 1,hp for some races. For eight years, Big Red sat in a museum but no amount of time could make anyone forget about this legendary Camaro. Inside, the block was stuffed with With components like this, Big Red is equipped for even the toughest abuse. While spitting out 1,hp is jaw-dropping, the Monster Motor also has an optional hp shot of nitrous hooked up to it. Big Red now makes use of three different engines, depending on what type of competition RJ is driving in. The dual quad engine is backed by a Liberty Road Race style four-speed transmission with long shifter, a McLeod Also, six and four-piston Baer calipers are used in the front and rear respectively, and inch rotors used all the way around for adequate stopping power. Here, Big

Red goes through its extensive checklist before any competition. In the rear, Big Red also sports QA1 double-adjustable coilovers but with pound springs and a Panard bar-backed three-link suspension system. A Ford 9-inch floater 31 spline spool rearend and a custom 2: At every event, Big Red continues to be the car to beat. To prove it, Big Red recently laid down a speed of There is just no limit to what the legendary Camaro is capable of. In addition to its racing, Big Red has also seen some Hollywood action since its rebirth, appearing in the fourth film of the Fast and the Furious franchise in You can find Big Red in the movie at minute marker

The Legend of the Big Red Chicken is the first episode of Dora the Explorer from Season One as well as the series premiere.

That was the year Babe Ruth broke launched imaginations by hitting an inconceivable 54 home runs — 25 more than his own Major League record. That was the first year women had the right to vote, and their vote turned the election to Warren G. When you see a list of Triple Crown-winning horses, you will always see Sir Barton listed first. There were not even unofficial mentions of the Triple Crown until , and no horse was said to have won the Triple Crown in the Racing Form until Gallant Fox in Sir Barton was only entered in the race to quicken the pace for the other horses. He took the lead early just like planned, only no horse was able to catch him — Sir Barton went wire-to-wire and won by five lengths. Sir Barton was rushed to Baltimore, again he took the early lead, again no other horse could catch him. He won the Preakness by four lengths. About a month later — this after winning the Withers Stakes — Sir Barton rolled to an American-record-setting victory at the Belmont Stakes. Most newspapers did not even mention it. No one had yet thought of connecting those three races. He was sent back, and while jockey Johnny Loftus was turing him around, the race was started. It could happen to anyone. But, as it turned out, jockey Loftus ran into bad racing luck. Every move he made seemed to get cut off. And everyone understood it was just one of those racing things that happen. Then, the loss took on epic proportions. Pettingill would be questioned about it constantly. And it all but destroyed the career of Loftus. At the end of the year, he lost his jockey license and it was probably because of his ride that day in Saratoga. It was clearly a badly bungled ride, but there was never any charge that Loftus did anything other than lose his head. The charge that he threw that race haunted him for the rest of his life. And, to give you yet another indication of how different things were then, the first thing he did was skip the Kentucky Derby. Well, that was a sign of the times. Remember in those days the Preakness was just after the Derby — 10 days later in The decision was easy: There would be no run for the roses. He still beat Paul Jones by 25 lengths. Big Red was rested and primed for the Preakness; he promptly set a track record even though the new jockey Charles Kummer held him back for the last furlong. He breezed to a two-length victory with Kummer again pulling him back in the last part of the race. The victory was so easy and done with so little effort that something happened: At the Belmont, for example, only two horses entered the race and one of those scratched just before the start. As it turns out, the odds should have been much higher. Big Red beat Donnacona by 20 lengths. What was left after that? Only one horse, John P. This created at least a little buzz. The hype was immense — and ridiculous. Nobody could beat Big Red. Videos, photos, tweets and more This realization actually led to one of the greatest moments in horse racing history. There was a tremendous effort by Belmont track promoters and newspaper reporters to stir up some competition. But nobody took up the challenge. And it looked like the Lawrence Realization would be a walkover. Even those extreme odds were ridiculously underpriced; Hoodwink was appropriately named. It was like saying my mouth is a 1-to favorite against a piece of a chocolate cake. The race was clearly absurd and a sham. But the idea was that even an absurd sham of a race is better than no race at all. He ran the race in 2: It was estimated that he beat Hoodwinked by lengths. What can be said after that? Like Alexander the Great, there were no worlds left to conquer. That race happened October 12, , in Canada. He beat Sir Barton by seven lengths, with his jockey pulling back on the reins at the finish.
