Published on September 24, Turns out these babies--dolloed up in the multicolored imprints created by Japanese artist Takashi Murakami--were not fakes, but the real thing. The company also sponsors a yearly art show in Japan, Geisai, which can be likened to the annual Armory Show in New York City and is itself an attempt to "flatten" the Japanese art market by making it navigable and accessible to young talents and buyers. He went on to do just that, developing a new palette for the signature pattern but also creating an animated film to help promote the goods. When--Murakami opened in L.
