In , re-drawn boundaries led to the constituency of Boothferry in East Yorkshire being renamed " Haltemprice and Howden ". Goldsborough Hall , near Knaresborough , was used to portray his Yorkshire country residence and used as a backdrop for the opening photo sequences along with a few exterior shots in the first season including the scene where he tries to run over the gardener in his Bentley. Alan was the youngest MP at the age of 31, and was a distillation of the greed and callousness that were considered the hallmarks of new money Thatcherites. In the last episode he creates splits in both the Tory and Labour Parties and names himself Lord Protector. When accused of engaging in sex acts with minors, Alan successfully sued The Times newspaper; when he plotted to get his hands on the stolen millions of Robert Maxwell who was hiding in Bosnia he was hailed as a humanitarian hero. Even when Alan was sentenced to death he managed to escape the noose and retain his position in Parliament. Sidney Bliss, the local pub landlord and a former hangman , was completely in his power in the hope of regaining his position. Many others " old Nazis, Cabinet Ministers and even Salman Rushdie " would regularly pay to buy his silence. A good quantity of women he bedded would be disappointed or contemptuous of his abilities in bed, despite his delusion that they must have enjoyed his sexual company as much as he did theirs. In the stage show it was revealed that Alan had been the architect of New Labour when he realised the Tories were done for effectively ignoring the last episode of the series , picking a young guitar-playing hippie named Tony Blair and grooming him to be PM. The show saw an older Alan, fabulously rich after orchestrating Black Wednesday , still up to his old tricks playing America and Al-Qaeda off each other in the hunt for weapons of mass destruction. Until May [1] Alan wrote a weekly opinion column in the Sunday Telegraph where he would detail his involvement in current events and even contributed to a Telegraph special of the Blair years where he hinted at being behind the deaths of John Smith , Mo Mowlam and Robin Cook. It was even claimed that Piers only became a Barrister at Law and MP for the Wiltshire seat of Devizes , in his family for generations through the intervention of his Teddy bear. Sarah originally remained married to Alan purely for money but their relationship evolved as the series progressed. After that, actress Marsha Fitzalan asked the screenwriters to take out this aspect of her character and she was instead shown sleeping with other men, which included threesomes. Just as quick to make shady money and with somewhat sordid personal tastes but with a stronger respect for Parliamentary institutions and the Conservative Party itself. Greville in fact places the good of the Tory Party far above the good of the country and says as much in the last episode. Series 4 found Greville out of Parliament after the election when local voters disagreed with his decision to place a nuclear waste plant in the middle of his own constituency. Despite being in Parliament for a very long time he has been resigned to the backbenches for many years after taking the fall in a scandal involving another minister who would go on to become Secretary of State for Wales. Sir Stephen gives Piers a stern telling-off before declaring that he "might as well accept that peerage" and then leaves the office, suggesting that he moved up to the House of Lords. Despite these seemingly genuine concerns for his locality, Roland on many occasions demonstrates his thorough nastiness. It is revealed that as the young Master of Ingleborough Colliery in , he was prepared to use mustard gas on his workers to stave off the threat of revolution then dumped the gas under a primary school. Roland is particularly unpleasant towards the French which he puts down to an unpleasant experience with a French woman called Giselle in , the last time he touched anything French and swears he will never use words again if he discovers them to have French origin. Roland also reveals his sinister nature by stating he turned down the chance to have Leon Brittan as MP for Haltemprice due to him being Jewish, preferring to consume South African produce South Africa was an apartheid state at the time , and Sarah later reveals that he knew Hitler socially, although they never discussed politics. He was on the run from the authorities who suspected him of dubious financial practices and was therefore forced to conduct his shady business with Alan in rather unconventional venues including an abandoned railway wagon and the back of an ambulance. The new Norman is not seen again after the first series. Sidney is also neurotic, suffering particularly from a fear of depths. In the special, he is a central character when Alan does indeed help re-introduce hanging though he does it more for personal profit than to help Sidney and is the executioner who is told to execute Alan. However, his attempt to kill Alan fails. Unlike Alan though he is honest, forthright and does his best by his constituents. Bob worked his way up from working in a car-plant to being a trade union leader and then became an MP. Bob however often accuses Alan of sinister motives to which he sometimes accidentally admits in the house. Political ideals[edit] Over the course of the series, stage shows and newspaper columns, Alan opined on numerous topics, most of which demonstrated his contempt for the working class and indeed anyone not of the political and financial elite the ordinaries. Alan at one time proposed inverting the rallying cry of the American War of Independence by stating that "No representation without taxation" was a more fitting clarion call, believing people such as himself the "enterprising, over-taxed minority" to be called on far too often to bail out other members of society. Alan used the same argument when proposing to cut off all social security payments to elderly people as he believes they should have considered how they would look after themselves instead of wasting their money on "ghastly holidays in Blackpool". When being interviewed by Brian Walden , Alan readily conceded that should he rule the UK, the rich would only pay tax on their cocaine, children would be forced to work in mills and the elderly and infirm would be left to die by the thousands. October Learn how and when to remove this template message The sitcom was one of the most critically successful ITV comedy series of its day, and developed a strong following: However, it was also regarded as very cruel and irreverent, treating all its subjects with black humour and violent slapstick. Amazingly, the bill passes, but Jericho is not done: When Jericho hands over his dirt in gratitude and goes to kill the Bishop, Alan has him arrested and forced out of office. When Crippen reveals the letter on the floor of the House of Commons, Alan goads him into calling a strike. After the first meeting, Alan steals a sheaf of particularly outlandish photographs and returns to his office, where he takes a meeting with Lady Virginia, an irrationally prudish aristocrat who has written a pamphlet entitled "Sex is Wrong". Learning that she will be forced to skip the upcoming Tory party conference , and seeing an opportunity to make some money and embarrass the CMR, he convinces her that he can get the pamphlet published, cons her into writing him a cheque, and then arranges to have it printed up by a pornographic book publisher, complete with full-color illustrations the same ones he stole from the meeting. At the party conference, however, he learns that Lady Virginia has decided to attend after all, and when she discovers what he has done, she threatens to tell Margaret Thatcher. In a panic, Alan delivers a rousing speech to the conference extolling the book as a guide to resisting the evils of immorality, complete with illustrations of what to resist. The book sells out almost immediately, and Alan turns a huge profit. Later that evening, at his hotel room , Lady Virginia arrives to tell him that after his speech, she has begun having feelings she has never had before Norman finds it using an old map, but refuses to help Alan dump the waste there when he learns that the mine now runs under a primary school. When he does, he discovers why the mine was closed: Roland offers to let Alan store his waste elsewhere, in a disused quarry he owns, but says he will charge Alan through the nose for it. James 11 October â€” Alan is invited to give the commencement speech at his alma mater, and while there encounters his former classmate Lance Okum-Martin, who tells him that he is now President for Life of the tropical Republic of St. After sampling some of St. Later, he meets with Norman, who comes up with a new scheme: Alan will get Lance to let him open an offshore bank on St. James which will be totally anonymous , offer obscenely high interest rates to depositors, and be tax-free. Once a sufficient number of deposits are made, the bank will go out of business and Alan will pocket the money. Lance is his grandson, a con man who just wanted to get Alan high and steal his money. After giving the pilot half of the loot to buy his silence, Alan manages to clear a slight profit from the venture. Three Line Whipping 18 October â€” Alan spends the night at a famed local brothel where he enjoys some BDSM , and an aborted police raid nearly makes him late for a morning television interview. As the interview begins, he discovers that the subject is an important by-election that happened the night before, and he has no idea what the result was. Humiliated on live TV, Alan takes out his anger on a cabbie who was taunting him, seemingly killing him. Desperate to hide the body, Alan stows it in the back of the cab and drives to his office, where Piers refuses to drive it into the country and set it on fire. When the police arrive, he convinces them that the cabbie went berserk and kidnapped him, and the cabbie is hauled away. Back at the office, he discovers that, due to her conversation with the "cabbie," the prime minister is now quite keen on him, and the Chief Whip is powerless to discipline him. Guzzler, is a fundamentalist Christian, Alan decides to win him over by getting Norma to pose as a prostitute and seduce the lecherous Secretary of State for Wales, which Alan will then photograph. After pausing to persuade Roland to sell him his unprofitable sheep ranch, one of the largest in the country and the only one in Haltemprice, Alan takes a meeting with Mr. Guzzler and his wife at one of their restaurants. As Sarah refuses to help him with his scheme, he gets Norma to pose as his wife. At the meeting, the Guzzlers invite Alan and his "wife" to join them in a swinger party to seal the deal, Alan is naturally forced to refuse. This turns out to be the right move, as Mr. Unfortunately, the land is the property of the Borough of Hackney, and the only person who can sell it to him is Georgina Pritt, the black, feminist, socialist leader of the Hackney Council, whom he spent the entire interview insulting the night before. Turning on the charm, Alan seduces her and persuades her to sell him the land as part of a deal to turn it into an enterprise zone, but her fellow members of the Council discover that she has been doing business with him and move to expel her from the party. As her last act as Council leader, she sells the land to herself and promptly retires to a private island. A depressed Alan agrees to withdraw his amendment, but cheers himself up by blackmailing the Chief Whip, who accidentally lets it slip that he is a closeted homosexual. Live from Westminster 22 January – Alan discovers that the introduction of television cameras to the House of Commons is the greatest opportunity of his career yet. After a few fiery speeches on the floor, he quickly becomes a superstar, and then begins raking it in by doing testimonials on the House floor and selling product tie-ins featuring himself to his legions of fans. He even becomes a permanent member of the panel on a popular game show and, despite alienating the host and the other guests with his insult comedy, becomes a ratings success. His new-found fame backfires, however, as he learns that Sarah has sold her life story to a national tabloid, which plans to serialise the entire sordid story, exposing all of his darkest secrets. Racing to 10 Downing Street, he implores Margaret Thatcher to intervene and stop the publication, but she refuses, saying that she ordered Sarah to write the memoir to cut him down to size. As the episode closes, Alan exploits the bombing to hawk fire safety gear on the House floor. Alan responds by suing The Times for libel, and hires Piers to be his barrister. Piers, as expected, manages to thoroughly bungle the case, and Alan finally fires him during the cross-examination of the reporter and announces that he will represent himself. Later, as Alan celebrates with Piers and Sarah, the reporter arrives and explains to the others that he and Alan had set the whole thing up so they could scam the paper out of the damages. Alan, however, feigns innocence, and reveals that he has taped the entire conversation, which he will now use to sue the reporter personally for further damages. Lacking the liquidity to invest in the scheme, and looking to cash in on the publicity from an ongoing Nazi hunt, Alan heads to the home of Helmut Drucker, an ex-Nazi living in Haltemprice whom Alan has been blackmailing for years, and who he now plans to turn in for the reward. After making some quick travel arrangements for Drucker, Alan meets him at a railway station to exchange his tickets for the gold, only to discover that Piers Fletcher-Dervish, not Lonsdale – angry at him for some earlier insults – has tipped off the media. Panicking, Alan pretends to have caught Drucker in the act of fleeing the country and in the ensuing struggle, he pushes the old man in front of an oncoming train. Although he is out the gold, Alan consoles himself that he will at least get some favourable publicity for killing a Nazi. To his astonishment, however, he finds that none of the media who were in attendance have reported the incident. Lonsdale explains that this is because the press are under strict orders from the prime minister not to publish negative stories about Tory MPs, "except, perhaps, Edward Heath. Once there, Alan finds that his pitch is rejected by the producer, and Piers accidentally samples some cocaine, which makes him violently, rabidly royalist, but Alan thinks he has saved the night for him, anyway, when he is propositioned for sex by Donna Nightingale, a sexy soap opera star who proclaims her interest in bondage. Once they get back to her apartment, the two have stripped down to their underwear, and Donna is tied to her bed, she announces that she needs some Quaaludes, which are in her purse out in her car. When the police come to arrest him for attempting to break in, he swallows the entire bottle, and ends up passing out and throwing most of the pills back up. Arrested for breaking and entering , public indecency , and possession of drugs, Alan awakes in the Malibu jail to find Piers coming to bail him out The resourceful Alan, drawing upon his status as a member of the Stale Food Working Group of the Parliamentary Catering Committee, gets the last laugh, however: As the guests, including his own wife, slide into nauseous comas, Alan delivers a very special toast to the happy couple Returning to London, Alan is shocked to discover that in his absence, Piers has been promoted and is now a junior minister to Sir Greville MacDonald, the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Chapter 2 : Kingsman: The Statesmen / Characters - TV Tropes

Foil Statesman The Foil Statesman is an eye-catching assortment of holiday patterns printed on beautiful metallized paper. This ensemble is primarily for holiday gift giving.

Kingsman[edit] Kingsman is a privately owned spy organisation in the United Kingdom. Kingsman agents are characterised by their bespoke bulletproof suits, Oxford shoes , and eyeglasses equipped with audio-visual communications, as well as their gentlemanly mannerisms. Their codenames are taken from the knights of the Round Table. Hatters and Berry Bros. He is based on Jack London from the graphic novel. Prior to joining Kingsman, he was studying to become a lepidopterist , but he joined the British Army instead. Pickle" for 11 years until it died of pancreatitis , then had it preserved for display in his home. He memorialises his missions by posting front pages of The Sun on the wall of his study room, each presenting an ordinary headline from the date of an assignment. Just as Valentine reveals his plan to commit a worldwide culling with the neurological waves, he shoots Harry in the left eye. Harry survives the gunshot due to timely medical attention by the American spy organisation Statesman, but he loses his left eye and suffers retrograde amnesia. After several failed attempts to snap Harry out of his amnesia, Eggsy brings in a puppy resembling Mr. Despite overcoming his amnesia, Harry experiences occasional butterfly hallucinations and impaired reactions due to a loss of depth perception and being out of practice. He is based on Gary London from the graphic novel. In the years since the death of his father, Eggsy has fallen into delinquency. He excelled at gymnastics before pressure from his stepfather Dean forced him to quit. Eggsy has a high I. Upon his entry into the Kingsman training program, Eggsy becomes the outcast, as the other candidates are well educated and come from wealthy families. He overcomes bullying from Charlie Hesketh and the other male trainees to become a finalist alongside Roxanne Morton; however, he ultimately loses when he fails the final test, which involves shooting his pug J. Unknown to Eggsy, the gun was loaded with blanks. After Harry is shot by Valentine and left for dead, his codename of Galahad passes to Eggsy. One night, he has dinner with the Royal Family of Sweden, which indirectly saves him from being killed along with all the other Kingsman agents in Britain in the hands of the Golden Circle. He is based on Rupert Greaves from the graphic novel. Following the Doomsday Protocol, they team up with their American counterpart Statesman in their mission to stop the Golden Circle from killing millions of people affected by their drugs. In order to give Harry and Eggsy an opening, he distracts the guards by singing " Take Me Home, Country Roads " by his favourite singer John Denver , causing them to surround him. Once surrounded, he steps off the landmine, killing himself and the guards. He is based on Sir Giles from the graphic novel. Arthur does not see Eggsy as a likely candidate for the organisation due to his lower-class background; he is further frustrated when Charlie, his preferred candidate, is eliminated in the program. Following the church incident, Eggsy discovers that Arthur made a deal with Valentine after spotting a surgical scar on his neck. Arthur attempts to kill Eggsy with a glass of poisoned brandy, but dies instead when Eggsy surreptitiously switches glasses with him. With his dying breath, Arthur curses Eggsy in a Cockney accent , indicating that he is not as aristocratic as he appears to be. She was selected and introduced into the selection process by Kingsman agent Percival. When it is just her and Eggsy as the last two contenders, she beats him and becomes the new " Lancelot " by showing willingness to shoot her training dog although the round is actually a blank. Roxy makes a brief appearance in Kingsman: The Golden Circle, covertly feeding information and conversation points to Eggsy during his dinner with Crown Princess Tilde and her parents. Whilst on a mission in , both he, Harry, and Merlin were saved by Lee Unwin, who sacrificed himself by jumping on a suicide bomber. She is actually bait for the trio to fall into the interrogation test, suggesting she works in some capacity for Kingsman. Interrogator The Interrogator Richard Brake has each of the final three Kingsman trainees tied to a railroad track in front of an oncoming train before asking them about the organisation. He is killed when a missile fired by the Golden Circle destroys the Kingsman tailor shop. Harry later reveals to Eggsy that Amelia was not a trainee, but an undercover Kingsman staff member planted within the group who faked her death to help solidify the high stakes of the training. They are both eliminated in the skydiving test for failing to land on the target. Statesman[edit] Statesman is an American private spy organisation posing as a Bourbon whiskey distillery in Louisville, Kentucky. In contrast to Kingsman, Statesman agents wear more rugged suits, cowboy hats, leather boots, and aviator sunglasses that operate similarly to Kingsman eyeglasses. With the exception of Ginger Ale see below , they are codenamed after alcoholic beverages. In a conversation with Champ, it is suggested he came from humble beginnings much like Eggsy, working as a rodeo clown before being taken on by the Statesman. When the blue rash worsens to a state of mania known as the "dancing disease", Ginger Ale has Tequila frozen in a cryogenic chamber to stabilise his health. Seeing that Whiskey has an ulterior motive, Harry shoots him in the head. Whiskey recovers back at Statesman headquarters and stops Eggsy and Harry from deploying the antidote, revealing that he wants all drug users dead after his pregnant wife was shot and killed by two methamphetamine addicts in a robbery years earlier. For years, she desired to be promoted into agent status, but Whiskey voted against her whenever a vacancy opened up. Many years after the death of her husband Lee, she marries Dean Baker and has a child with him. However, she and Eggsy are frequently abused by Dean. When Eggsy kills Valentine, he manages to stop his mother from killing his baby sister. After becoming a full-fledged Kingsman agent, Eggsy encourages his mother to leave Dean and move to a new home. When Kingsman discovers that Arnold is alive and has returned to work in London, Harry pays him a visit. The Golden Circle, she and Eggsy are in a relationship and living together in London. Tilde gives Eggsy a new puppy to replace his dog JB, also killed in the strike, before he departs to bring down the Golden Circle cartel. She is distraught when Eggsy tells her the mission requires him to seduce another woman. Later, Princess Tilde calls Eggsy in a state of mania, alerting him that she has been infected with the drugs. She is cured with the antidotes and at the end of the film, she marries Eggsy.

Elton John In Kingsman: During her televised message to the President of the United States, Poppy demonstrates the antidote of her toxin on a paralysed Elton. Main[edit] Richmond Valentine The main antagonist of Kingsman: Jackson is a tech industry billionaire philanthropist who speaks with a lisp and has a weak stomach for violence. He is based on Dr. Valentine is extremely concerned with global warming , and after several failed environmental projects, comes to the conclusion that mankind is both the cause and the problem. Valentine begins to distribute free SIM cards offering unlimited phone and Internet coverage worldwide, planning to use them to transmit a neurological wave that triggers aggression and switches off inhibitors in the brain, which will result in mass killing worldwide and thus reduce the global population. At the same time, he abducts several celebrities and dignitaries while making deals with those who agree with his plan by implanting an electronic device on their necks that make them immune to the broadcast. Valentine confronts him, and after revealing his plan to Hart shoots him in the head, an act that causes him to nearly throw up in disgust. Following the church incident, Valentine initiates "V-Day", when he plans to broadcast his neurological wave on a global scale. Having lost her legs at a young age, she walks using metallic appendages that double as razor sharp blades. It is she who kills James Spencer, the original "Lancelot", in Argentina. She is also instrumental in the kidnapping of Crown Princess Tilde of Sweden, murdering her two bodyguards when they try to intervene. After a long bout of hand-to-hand combat, Gazelle is killed by Eggsy, who cuts her arm with a poison-tipped shoe blade. Despite having essentially a monopoly on the recreational drug trade, she does not take drugs, or consume other addictive substances such as sugar or alcohol. Poppy utilises robots in addition to people to provide security, noting that they are much more loyal and better at following orders. Two of such robots are cybernetic attack dogs named Bennie and Jet, named after the Elton John song " Bennie and the Jets ". She is mentioned to suffer from an unspecified mental illness, and displays psychopathic tendencies. Poppy laces a toxin within every recreational drug available, which causes users to develop blue rashes all over their body before progressing through mania, paralysis, and ultimately, death. With millions of users affected by the blue rash, she offers the antidote to the world if the President of the United States ends the war on drugs and makes her organisation legally immune. When Harry and Eggsy break through her lair, Poppy is forced to give them the password to the remote control for the antidote drones after Eggsy injects her with a large dose of heroin which contains a considerably more potent version of her toxin engineered by Merlin. After giving the password, she immediately dies, not from the effects of the virus, but from a heroin overdose. Supporting[edit] Charlie Hesketh Charles "Charlie" Hesketh Edward Holcroft is a Kingsman trainee who is eliminated in the semifinals after failing the railroad tracks test when he reveals the organisation to his interrogator. It is revealed in Kingsman: Eggsy then fights Charlie with one arm behind his back and breaks his neck to avenge his friends and fellow agents, informing Charlie before he does so that he is more of a gentleman than Charlie would ever be. He takes pleasure in abusing both Eggsy and his mother. After his gang mates are knocked out by Harry in the bar, Dean threatens to kill Eggsy before Harry stops him remotely, threatening to expose his criminal activities if he harms Eggsy. Dean and his gang are not heard from again after Eggsy enters the local pub as a Kingsman agent and knocks him out with a beer mug and defeats most of his gang. When the gang confronts Harry at the pub the next day, Harry knocks out Rottweiler with a stun bullet from his umbrella. He betrays Princess Tilde and sides with Valentine, allowing her to be kidnapped. However, as part of his initiation, Angel is ordered by Poppy to kill Charles by forcing him through a meat grinder. He believes allowing the "junkie scum" to die from the effects of the virus will both eradicate drug use in the United States and allow his administration to claim they have won the war on drugs. Not discriminating against who is detained, he even has Fox, his Chief of Staff, quarantined when she develops the blue rash. After the antidote is released worldwide, Fox has the President impeached for conspiring to commit mass genocide on all drug users. At the Glastonbury Festival, Eggsy plants a tracking device in her. When she develops the blue rash after taking drugs at the festival, she unknowingly leads Eggsy, Harry, and Whiskey to the antidote factory in northern Italy after her communication with Charlie is intercepted. Before escaping with the antidote sample, Eggsy lets slip to Charlie that he and Clara almost slept together. Fueled by rage and jealousy, Charlie kills Clara and destroys the antidote factory by activating its self-destruct mechanism.

Let me translate that for you. He also is condescending towards Eggsy and Harry. Harry shoots him in the head, suspecting him of being a Double Agent. He survives thanks to Eggsy applying the Statesman nanomachines. He confidently tells Eggsy to "watch and learn" from him before trying to seduce a target. Cruel and Unusual Death: An outright villainous, if still-sympathetic, one. Dark and Troubled Past: His wife, who was pregnant with their son, was a casualty when two drug users robbed a convenience store. The Golden Circle makes a lot of comparisons between Whiskey and Harry. Both are top agents in their respective agencies, both mentor Eggsy with varying results, both have motivations that are driven by tragedy, and both even have a bar fight scene to establish their badass credentials. Too bad that while Harry is heroic enough to not actually wish death upon a church full of bigots, Whiskey is willing to let innocent people die along with the actual criminals. Fish out of Water: One-sided example with Ginger. It turns out he has an irrational dislike towards Ginger due to reasons not fully explored. Ginger quickly snaps him out of it. Both Eggsy and him have to live through a very traumatic experience, Eggsy losing all his colleagues at Kingsman not to mention his dog, and Whiskey losing his pregnant wife. Whiskey, on the other hand, does a very great job of hiding his true feelings, but deep down he harbors a deep hatred and desire for vengeance against drug-users for killing his wife, and he lets his emotions cloud his judgments, making him willing to condemn every drug user to death. To Harry as well. However, while Harry is a complete gentleman who treats Eggsy with nothing short of respect and patience, Whiskey is often condescending towards Eggsy despite the implication that he sees him as a surrogate for his unborn son. His pregnant wife was killed in a shootout between meth-heads, causing him to develop a burning hatred of drug users. He Who Fights Monsters: According to him, he and his wife were this. His plan is to let millions of innocent drug-using victims that include literal children perish, with side-effect of skyrocketing Statesman liquor sales. But, his only true love was his beloved wife, who was murdered. Avenging his dead wife is his biggest motivator for betraying the Statesmen. A Polaroid image of his deceased wife during their happy times is what Ginger uses to bring back his memories whenever she needs to. Harry suspects him of being this and shoots him in the head as a result, but Eggsy saves him using the Statesman nanomachine film. Only in It for the Money: His Freudian Excuse mentioned above is one reason why he wants all drug users to die. The other is the fact that, according to him, his Statesman shares will skyrocket when it happens. His wife was pregnant with their son when she was murdered. Of sorts, to Eggsy. His real name is Jack Daniels. It was just too good of an opportunity to pass up. Revolvers Are Just Better: He dual-wields a pair of Colt Single Action Army revolvers. And he has a personal F-16 fighter jet! Honestly, Whiskey runs on little else but Rule of Cool. Another factor of this is his dead wife as he never moved on from mourning her. As you can probably notice, half the tropes here are about how cool he is, the other half is about his hidden agenda and motivation. He spins his revolvers around his trigger fingers while fighting off a swarm of mooks. His main weapon is an extendable lasso which also can be energized and cut people in half, but he also has a whip on the side.

The New Statesman is a British sitcom made in the late s and early s satirising the United Kingdom's Conservative Party Government of the period. It was written by Laurence Marks and Maurice Gran at the request of, and as a starring vehicle for, its principal actor Rik Mayall.
