If you're into small dogs, a Shih Tzu Chihuahua mix may be the ultimate expression of size and cuteness. But while the look of the so-called Shi Chi can warm your heart, there are several things you should know about the designer dog before you bring one into your home.

Health Problems Considering their smallness, it is needless to say that they do not need too much of exercise. With their playful nature and active, zealous lifestyle, most of their daily fitness needs are met. Only about 20 minutes of exercise is enough for your shichi. You can take them out for a short walk or jog, and can participate with them in their activities. Let them off their leash while playing in an enclosed space. Games like fetching, dog agility, flyball, or obedience competitions might be appealing to them. Clip their coats if you would prefer keeping the grooming minimal. A clipped coat needs no more than one brushing per week. However, brushing them at least two to three times a week is recommended to keep it from matting or collecting dead hair. Bathe them once a month. Giving them a haircut when they are really long, and this should also prevent fleas. Treating fleas by topical medicines work best. Like most other crosses, they are not much prone to catching diseases, except for the general dog diseases and some hereditary ailments like hypoglycemia, obesity, eye problems ulcers, cataracts, epiphora , respiratory problems, etc. Also, because the shichis are small and fragile, they are susceptible to catching colds if left outside for long periods.

Training Apparently, shichi puppies can present some challenges during training. However, proper techniques, early socialization, frequent praises can make the job easier. Reward them for good behavior, allow them to mix with other pets and children of your family. Let them know your neighbors and friends, and how to deal with unknown faces. ShiChis are a little slow to housebreak, though kenneling them is an effective method, which has proven to be successful on them, just like it is on the Shih-tzus. Divide this into two servings. Keep an eye so that the little one gets a proper nutrition through its meals, which is very necessary for its everyday growth. Both their parents belong to toy breeds, and their offspring will naturally be of toy breed size.

The Buddha told the King that your fortunes and misfortunes are entirely determined by your actions and behavior. Four types of Lives The Buddha elaborated that there are four types of life in this world. The first is the one who enters darkness from darkness. In this case, a person is born into a condition of destitute poverty; he lacks all compassion, constantly violates social norms and falls into self-degradation. After death, a person who leads such a life will descend to hell. The second type is the one who enters light from darkness. A person may have lived in poor conditions for a long time. But, if his heart is filled with love and his actions are guided by adherence to the right principles, he will soon be born into a path of compassion and then a world of light and wisdom. The third type is one who enters darkness from light. A person is fortunate to have lived in luxury but does not treasure this blessing; instead, he abuses others with his power. When his blessings come to an end, he will fall into the Three Evil Paths. The fourth type is the one who enters light from light. People who have this type of life are not only wealthy in terms of monetary fortune but also are spiritually rich -- they have wisdom, a compassionate heart and a passion for helping others to benefit the community. Practicing Buddhism is about leaving the darkness and aiming for the light. All behavior arises from the heart. When the heart strives to be compassionate, then light is before your eyes. When the heart is evil, you will fall into darkness. A human life only lasts a few decades. If you can be content, follow moral principles and still be able to help others, you are spiritually wealthy -- despite a lack of material goods. If you live in luxury but are able to transform this material wealth into the power of love to help people, your heart will be filled with light and happiness. What a beautiful life to lead!

Appearance[edit] A Tricolor black, white Shih Tzu in show coat. The Shih Tzu is a sturdy little dog with a short muzzle and large dark eyes. They have a soft and long double coat. Although sometimes long, a Shih Tzu will not always have extremely lengthy hair. Some of them have more short, curly hair. This is purely a choice made by the owners. A Shih Tzu should stand no more than Drop ears are covered with long fur , and the heavily furred tail is carried curled over the back. The coat may be of any color, though white and with blazes of grey are frequently seen. The Shih Tzu is slightly longer than tall, and bigger dogs ideally should carry themselves "with distinctly arrogant carriage". A very noticeable feature is the underbite , which is required in the breed standard. Because of their long coat and fast-growing hair, regular grooming is necessary, which may be expensive and should be taken into account when considering adopting one of this breed. Often, the coat is clipped short to simplify care, but the coat still requires daily brushing. For conformation showing, the coat must be left in its natural state, though trimming for neatness around the feet and anus is allowed. The shorter cut is typically called a "puppy cut" [4] or a "teddy bear cut" when the puppy cut is accompanied by a fuller, rounder face, resembling a stuffed animal. They tend to be possessive, especially around other dogs. Training and proper socializing must start at a young age for the Shih Tzu to obey basic commands, for the Shih Tzu is prone to stubbornness when it comes to training. While the Shih Tzu is an excellent watchdog because of its alert and active nature, it was not specifically bred for this purpose. Unlike the Lhasa Apso , which was bred to be a sentinel dog that enjoys high perches and is wary of strangers, the Shih Tzu prefers to be close to its companions and will often offer strangers its affection. Because of its friendly nature, the Shih Tzu tends to interact well with other dogs and with children and adults. Composer James Mumford described the Shih Tzu as " A female Shih Tzu at around 18 months of age. A Tricolor Shih Tzu with a black nose and grey ear tips. A mostly white Shih Tzu with a black head and ears The Shih Tzu comes in a range of colours that include various shades of gold, white, brown, and black. Other colours include black mask gold, black and white, solid black, solid liver, liver and white, brindle, white, red and white, and grey and white. An interesting point and often a point of confusion is that while the coat color of those with black pigmented skin nose, lips, pads, also referred to as "leather" is determined by the color of the coat itself; the coat color on dogs with either liver or blue pigment is categorized by the color of the pigment. Thus, a parti colored white and another shade Shih Tzu with blue pigment is a "blue and white" regardless of the tint of the hair which might very well appear similar to a gold and white or other colors. The same principle applies to solid blue, silver, and silver and white. Sometimes you might see dark brown pigments near the shoulders and between the armpits. The coat color changes as the dog gets older. The typical fine, straight, and silky Shih Tzu coat has also been listed by many popular dog information websites as being hypoallergenic. In comparison with many other breeds, Shih Tzu do not shed to the same degree, only losing small amounts when bathed or brushed. Allergists do recognize that, at times, a particular allergy patient will be able to tolerate a particular dog; but they agree that "the luck of the few with their pets cannot be stretched to fit all allergic people and entire breeds of dogs". The Shih Tzu coat is said to fall out only when brushed or broken, or just said to shed. Though the Wade-Giles system is often regarded as less intuitive, "Shih Tzu" is a useful linguistic example of both of two cases where the Wade-Giles scheme reflects the use of a syllabic fricative after a corresponding consonant cluster retroflexes and sibilants in modern Mandarin. This is a unique phonological feature that does not appear in any other known modern language in their standardized form. Indeed, though the exact classification is still debated and dialectal variants exist , linguists generally agree that these sounds cannot be represented by conventional symbols in the IPA ; hence an unorthodox approximation "SHIRR" was used earlier in this paragraph. However, the use of a syllabic fricative is often observed in informal English with the paralinguistic expression "Shh! In modern Chinese language, the Shih Tzu is generally known as the "Xi Shi dog"; Xi Shi was regarded as one of the most beautiful women of ancient China. The alternative name was adopted to avoid the confusion that stems from referring to the breed as a lion. A book on the breed states that "dog historians tend to have very strong opinions" on the subject. It is also said that the breed originated in China, hence the name "Lion Dog", in B. Theories relate that it stemmed from a cross between the Pekingese and Lhasa Apso , [14] a Tibetan dog given by the Dalai Lama to Chinese emperors near the end of the 17th century. The dogs were favorites of the Chinese royals and so prized that, for years, the Chinese refused to sell, trade, or give any away. The first dogs of the breed were imported into Europe England and Norway in and were classified by the Kennel Club as "Apsos".

Health[edit] Shih Tzu puppy A number of health issues, some of them hereditary , have been found in individual Shih Tzu, and are listed below. A cream coloured Shih Tzu puppy Hypothyroidism[edit] Hypothyroidism occurs when the thyroid gland malfunctions and stops producing a hormone responsible for proper metabolism. This malfunction is commonly attributed to immune system problems. It usually affects middle-aged dogs and is seen in all breeds. Symptoms include hair loss, weight gain, muscle loss, and lethargy. This disease is usually diagnosed through blood tests. It can be effectively treated with drug therapy.

Intervertebral disk disease[edit] Intervertebral disk disease in the dog is a common chondrodystrophic disorder manifested by acute back pain, loss of coordination, paresis , and loss of the ability to feel deep pain sensations. Breathing problems[edit] Shih Tzu have a number of respiratory problems related to the shape of their face and head. Brachycephalic airway obstructive syndrome is a common problem and mostly affects dogs with short noses brachycephalic breeds. An obstruction in the upper airways causes the dog to have labored breathing. Not every brachycephalic dog will develop respiratory problems, but most will to some degree. Severe problems may require surgery. Eye issues[edit] It is very common for Shih Tzus to develop eye problems at any age, and even more so once they are older. Most veterinarians will recommend eye drops to assist with any eye irritations. Some dogs have allergies which causes excess discharge around the eye. Older Shih Tzu are known to develop cataracts which can be corrected with surgery. If not treated, the dog may become blind in the eye that has the cataract. The distinctive large eyes can easily be scratched which may cause an ulcer. The dog will normally have the injured eye closed or half closed and may have excessive tears. There have been cases of Shih Tzu being epileptic , which in turn may lead to shortening of the lifespan of the Shih Tzu if untreated. Many Shih Tzu dogs are also prone to ear infections. Smokey lived to be 23 years old. Their hindquarters are muscular. Neither should be too short nor too long. The standard head is big and round and is set high with face looking forward or up. The neck and body are the most important and should not be exaggerated. The shoulders of the American type of Shih-Tzu are frontal.
