The heat and humidity is still intense every where we go so this afternoon will just be a WalMart run into Lebanon and then not leave our air conditioned Bouncer in Countryside RV Park. We saw the hole that remains. So we decided, what the heck, lets put the address in our GPS and drive by and see whats left of Twitty City. What a wonder surprise we had in store for us. We went in what appeared to be the office and were met by a very nice woman who explained the background of Trinity Music City and the religious organization that it is. She asked us if we wanted to watch a movie on it However, she explained, we could watch the 10 minute movie, the doors to the side would open automatically and she would meet us outside and give us a tour. We are speechless at this point. She opens the door and the three of us go inside. Here we are, standing in this beautiful mansion, and shes explaining that only a few pieces of furniture are original because of the lawsuits. My favorite story she tells, is she asked management to put a recording that when the front door opens you hear Conway say, "Hello Darlin" I thought that was a grand idea. The original pieces of furniture were Conways desk and a John Wayne go figure! After about 15 to 20 minutes she has to lock up the house and return to work in the office and she shows us that they have a "bistro" on the property where they serve lunch and then points out the gift shop that we can stop by. We thank her profusely and bid her goodbye and then wander through the garden taking pictures of the fountains, the house and everything else. We walked over to the bistro and have a delicious and rather inexpensive lunch and just sit staring out the window at the mansion. I will add there were 2 other people having lunch while we were there. In the gift shop they only have 1 postcard of "the house" at night as the entire gift shop contains religious articles. They asked if we wanted to see a "religious video" in the theater but we declined. The experience was unreal When I think of Graceland and the commercial aspect of it and what we experienced today it was truly an amazing experience. Much love to family and friends and boy is the fun continuing.
