Yesterday was a very special day for Heartland, as the Calgary International Film Festival (CIFF) announced this year's festival would be celebrating a decade of Heartland at a Saturday, October 1.

Edit At the beginning of season one, Ty Borden is a troubled and ill-tempered year-old. He entered "juvie" at a young age after attacking his step-father, Wade, for abusing his mother. When Ty first arrives at Heartland he reves his truck and speeds past Amy Fleming while she is out riding with a friend, angering her. He, at first, reluctantly agrees to let Ty stay and work at Heartland for the duration of his probation. Jack lets Ty stay in the room above the barn, the loft which Ty is none too thrilled about. Ty often frustrates Jack when he begins working as a stable hand, often slacking off and giving attitude. Jack especially becomes upset when Ty goes to a party that Amy is also attending when he was supposed to be working. Amy leaves the party angry and Ty follows. Ty apologizes and offers her ride home, to which Amy originally rejects but eventually agrees. Jack gets angry with Ty, and Ty then decides to leave. In the second episode, Ty builds a track for Amy to practice her jumping, beginning to show a softer side to him. Ty and Amy become good friends and they both start developing feelings for each other. Ty and Amy have many flirty moments where they both lean towards wanting more than friendship but ultimately not wanting things to change between them. This causes them to spend more and more time together leading to them kissing in the season finale. Although Ty wants to be with Amy, he leaves in the middle of the night to live with his estranged father, hoping to reconnect.

Season 2 Edit At the beginning of season two, Ty comes back from being with his dad; Amy is upset with him for leaving, bringing on a tension between them. In episode 4, Ty finally tells Amy about his father and why he left. He tells her he should have called but was worried that the one thing he wanted to say she might not have wanted to hear anymore. As Ty is about to leave, Amy grabs his arm and kisses him. She says she is willing to risk that but he is not willing to. Ty not wanting to hurt Amy begins a relationship with Kit Bailey but is not totally invested as he is in love with Amy. They eat dinner together and talk about the future. Ty is thinking of interning with Scott Cardinal at the Vet Clinic. Amy asks about their future and Ty says it is up to her. Ty becomes ill and Amy takes care of him. That night Amy dreams of everything they have been through so far. When she wakes up his fever is gone and he tells her she is beautiful. They go outside and hug. She tells him she has always loved him, and he tells her he loves her too. They kiss and officially begin a relationship.

Season 3 Edit Ty and Amy start the season really happy as they are finally in a good place together. After a tragic accident Ty questions if he can even be a vet but Amy convinces him he can do it. Peter and Lou taught him though. He turns on his radio and they dance in the bed of his truck. He stops dancing and gives Amy a promise ring that he bought for her. Another truck drives by and asks if they need help they both say no and continue dancing and kissing. However, it does not make it out alive so they decided to replace it with an orphaned foal, Merlin. This did not work out all too well as she rejects the poor horse. Amy gets jealous when Ty tells Kit about him getting into two universities before her. In Growing Pains, they get to experience what it is like to be parents as Merlin, the orphaned foal needs someone to take care of him. She asks Amy to give her a chance while she is watching her work on the animal. Ty gives his mom an ultimatum after he finds her in a bar with Wade. Amy and Ty see less and less of each other as Ty is working with Scott and is about to head out for school. They get into a fight and Scott and Ty get on a plane and it crashes. She apologizes to him for the fight. He tells her that he learned something. She asks him what he learned and he kisses her. Ty tells Amy that he is going to wait a year to go to school because this is where he needs to be right now. In the season finale, Amy and Ty get into an argument over her joining the Ring of Fire tour. She wants him to go with her but he wants to do his own thing for a while. She gives him the ring back and leaves. As he begins to drive away she follows him on the horse. Amy and Ty then hug each other and apologize. She says she is going on tour with her Dad, Tim, and he is leaving on a road trip for a while. They say that they love each other and she asks for the ring back. They kiss and he leaves. This leaves Amy jealous but pretends nothing has changed. Ty and Amy hug and say they missed each other and kiss. Amy feels left out as Blair and Ty reminisce about their trip. They begin fighting as things are different again and since Blair is always there they have had no time alone since he got back. After Blair helped Amy in an accident, Blair kisses Ty and tells her that she thinks she is in love with him. He tells her that they should just be friends. After Blair and her boyfriend Grant left, Ty starts all over with Amy. This makes Amy happy. During a clinic, Chase Powers kisses Amy. When she tells Ty he is really upset but forgives her. Amy almost misses her graduation because Spartan coliced and Amy blames herself. Ty then drives her there and onto the stage on his motorcycle so she can get her diploma. She decides to take the year off to figure out her next step. Ty is heartbroken but tries to be there for her still. In the finale, Ty and Amy help two horses that belong to Lisa. Amy and Ty argue on how to help them. Then Lou is in labor and Ty and Amy figure out their differences. This brings them back together. Season 5 Edit Ty and Amy are together in the first episode. Ty decides to move out from the loft as he needs a place of his own. Ty moving out proves to be a good thing for their relationship as they grow closer together. After a near death experience falling off his motorcycle and hitting head on a rock he has flashbacks of everything he and Amy have been through and realizes that he wants to spend the rest of his life with Amy. In the last episode, Ty decides that he wants to propose to Amy. Every time he is about to he backs out. He has a talk with Jack and asks for his permission to propose. He goes outside to get more firewood. Inside his phone rings and Amy goes to answer it finding the engagement ring. Amy having found the ring is wondering what is taking so long for Ty to propose. Ty takes her on a fancy dinner and loses the ring. Georgie gives Amy the ring but when Amy goes to put it back in the dresser Ty catches her and she says that they should talk about it. She asked what she did to make him change his mind he goes to tell her and is interrupted. They both decide to wait. During a fishing trip to help out an old friend, Ty and Amy help a foal. Then Ty proposes to Amy and Amy saying yes leaves them engaged. He has problems with Jeremy he has a lot of problems and he keeps on threatening Amy and Ty got sick of it. Ty got fired from his job because Jeremy killed a horse, Season 7 Edit The season begins with Ty and Amy happily engaged, Amy continuing what her mother started, and Ty studying to become a veterinarian. They discuss buying a ranch nearby together, but it eventually sells. Half-way through the season, it comes back on the market, and they begin to make plans to buy it. He tells her they will still get married no matter what, and her sight eventually returns. Ty supports her decision fully, though is sad for the months they will spend apart. He is shown watching her helicopter lift off and fly away with a solemn expression. Season 9 Edit The beginning of the season finds Ty maturing as he embraces married life and settles into the new position it affords him in the Heartland family. He also reaches a personal milestone and launches his professional career in earnest.

Heartland is not like any other ranch – it is a horse ranch with a special mission of treating troubled or neglected horses and finding them new homes, and Amy has inherited her late mother's uncanny ability to work with, understand and help heal those horses.

When Amy was fifteen years old, she was seriously injured in a car accident that killed her mother, Marion, while she was attempting to save Spartan, an abused horse. However, she must readjust to not only to her father re-entering her life, but also the return of her older sister Lou, who has been living New York City. Over time, Amy develops a close relationship with Ty Borden, a young man invited by Marion before her death to work as a ranch hand at Heartland as part of his probation. Ty begins to assist Amy in healing the horses and their friendship gradually turns to love. Though their relationship is rocky and they break up more than once, they manage to make amends and Ty gives Amy a promise ring in season 3. In the last episode of season 5, Ty secretly makes plans to propose to Amy, but after hearing her say how they should never "tie themselves down", he decides against it, not realizing that Amy would later find the ring in his pocket. After they discuss the ring and marriage, Ty later finds the perfect moment to propose to Amy, and she accepts. The change in their relationship results in them breaking up briefly, getting back together when they rescue a herd of horses penned by ranchers who believed the horses to be detrimental to the land required for their cattle. At the end of season 9, Amy reveals that she is pregnant with their child, though she goes through her pregnancy without Ty by her side, as he is away in Mongolia to save Gobi bears, a decision in which Amy supported Ty. They regularly communicate through Skype, though she misses having him nearby. At the end of Season 10, Amy gives birth at home to a baby girl, Lyndy Marion. He soon begins to enjoy his life there and decides to stay after completing his probation, though he leaves for a short period to live with his biological father in Calgary. Jack treats Ty like a son and is very proud of him, especially after he earns his high school diploma and decides to study to become a vet. Ty dated Kit Bailey, a local cowgirl, for a time before he admitted his feelings for Amy. He and Amy have a tumultuous relationship over the subsequent seasons. In the final episode of Season 5, Ty buys a ring with plans to propose to Amy, but rethinks his proposal after hearing Amy say they should never "tie themselves down. While camping, Ty finds the perfect moment to propose to Amy, who accepts, and they later marry. After Amy tells Ty that he is going to become a father, she supports his decision to go to Mongolia to save the last of the Gobi bears with Veterinarians Without Borders. Near the end of the season, Ty contracts a potentially life-threatening illness from a tick bite and returns to Calgary in critical condition. He is immediately taken to the hospital, where they help him to slowly recover. However, Amy goes into labor as they arrive at the church and they rush home for the birth of their daughter. She is initially reluctant to stay in Hudson because she has a long-term boyfriend and a lucrative job in New York. However, she is told by a financial advisor at the bank that her presence at the ranch is essential to secure the loan necessary to implement her plan. Once Lou decides to stay, she runs the business end of Heartland, taking care of appointments and setting rates for stabling patient horses. She later sets her mind to starting a new business venture: The Heartland Equestrian Connection. This idea is met with much resistance, especially from Jack. Family members derisively refer to the business as the "Dude Ranch", and the name sticks, though no longer with its negative connotation. Along the way, Lou breaks up with her boyfriend from New York and tries to re-kindle a romance with the local vet, Scott Cardinal. They move to Dubai , but she soon feels very alone in such a foreign country and grows to miss Heartland and her family. When they move back home, Lou finds out she is pregnant. After several failed attempts to buy a place of their own and even to build a home somewhere on the acre property at Heartland, Lou and Peter buy Mr. Bell and they plan to move into it and refurbish it. However, faulty wiring in the structure causes a fire, and the buildings and stables burn, leaving them no choice but to remain at Heartland. Lou has a positive relationship with her sister Amy, providing a listening ear and timely advice when she needs it, and Amy often plays the same role for Lou. In Season 6, Lou and Peter decide to adopt an orphan named Georgina Crawley, whom Jack had been fostering after discovering her hiding in the loft. In season 8, Lou and Peter start having relationship problems since Peter is constantly in Vancouver for his job. Peter returns to Hudson to try to persuade Lou that they can work things out, but she is not interested, since nothing has changed. Lou later tries online dating, and seems to be falling for the new stable hand, Mitch. She runs it with Tim, who acts as her business partner. He is a former rodeo star and was once a cattle rancher. When Marion took over, Heartland became a horse ranch. After her death, Jack helps Amy and Ty maintain Heartland and its horses and he is the one who fixes broken equipment, fences, and the like. Early in the series, he was very hostile towards ex-son-in-law Tim. Jack was initially very judgmental towards Ty, and he warned the young man to keep ten feet away from his granddaughters at all times or risk losing any part of his body that crossed that line. Over time, Jack comes to accept Ty like a son and shows a great deal of concern and paternal affection for him. In terms of personality, Jack is very stubborn and reluctant to accept change of any kind. This trait sometimes causes friction between him and others, most notably his romantic interest, Lisa Stillman, and with his granddaughter Lou. In season 7, Jack finally asks Lisa to marry him, and she says yes. They elope in the season 7 finale. Jack also suffers from heart problems after having a heart attack. When Jack is missing one episode after collapsing in the fields, Tim is the one to find and save him. Jack dotes on his two great-granddaughters, Katie and Georgie. When she first came to Heartland, she was a misbehaving runaway, but because she wanted to stay, she began to improve her behavior. Jack agrees to foster her until Clint was able to find another family to foster her. Not wanting her to leave, Lou and Peter agree to become her long-term foster parents and later adopt her. Georgie adores Katie, her little sister. She is a naturally talented show jumper, reminding Ty of Amy on Spartan when Georgie jumps with Phoenix. She met Phoenix when she was escaping from her social worker and rode for the first time, astounding the family. This makes Mallory very jealous of her when they first meet. In Season 6, she finds an Alsatian dog running wild, whom she is allowed to keep and names Remi. When Georgie was 3, her birth parents were killed in a car accident. She has an older brother named Jeff. Over time, Georgie develops strong bonds with the family. However, she continues to misbehave at times, even running away once. She has a rival named Olivia, with whom she later develops a grudging friendship. In the later seasons, Georgie and Olivia join the Extreme Team, a trick riding group. She works hard and is one of the best members of the team, performing stunts such as Roman riding. Georgie has some difficulty balancing schoolwork, life on a ranch, and her interest in trick riding. While Georgie is very reluctant to have a tutor in math, her grades improve. Georgie later develops romantic feelings for Adam Parker, her tutor. Eventually, it all works out and Georgie and Adam date for a few months. Georgie also develops a strong friendship with Jade Virani, though they were definitely not friends when they met in Season 7. After a rodeo accident, he struggled with prescription drug painkiller abuse and alcoholism. As a result, Jack kicked Tim out and he moved to Fort St. He later begins to date a jockey named Janice, and nearly moves to California with her. When he reveals this to Janice, she leaves for California without him. At the end of season 5, it is announced that Miranda has feelings for Tim. He starts a rodeo school, a horse-selling business, and a new relationship. When he finds out that Miranda is getting married, he tries to crash the wedding, until Jack hides his keys and they have an argument. After he moves on, he has a long-term relationship with Casey McMurtry and later starts his own rodeo school. In the beginning he is rather husky, has feelings for Amy, and develops a strong rivalry with Ty over Amy. He and Amy are a couple for a short period, but Amy soon goes back to Ty. He grows close to and falls in love with Ashley Stanton, eventually getting married. Caleb is a rodeo cowboy, competing in events such as bronc riding. Before his marriage to Ashley, Caleb is severely injured at a rodeo. Ashley remains in Italy for a time, then decides she wants to pursue postsecondary education in Vancouver. Caleb moves to be with Ashley there, but they drift apart as she makes new friends and spends more time away from Caleb. They eventually divorce, and Caleb returns to Hudson and resumes working at Heartland as a ranch hand, though he returns to his seasonal occupation at the rodeo. Caleb loves his American Quarter Horse, Shorty, who is his rodeo partner. Caleb and Cass have a pregnancy scare, and Caleb finds the pregnancy test. There is quite a bit of dramatic irony during this episode, as the audience knows Cass is the one who might be pregnant, but Caleb and Ty become convinced it is Amy. In the end, this is sorted out. Caleb and Cass almost break up, but he eventually proposes and they are married in a church in Hudson at the end of Season Ty and Amy were supposed to attend, but Amy went into labour just as they arrived, and they had to rush home. He was first introduced as PW, the owner of a small oil company called Bedford Oil, caught doing some drilling on Heartland property. Stage set for a bit of dramatic irony: Lou using her first name, Sam and PW using his first name, Peter begin a relationship over an instant messaging service. Lou returns from Dubai for a one-week visit that stretches on because she has been living so far from Heartland and her family.

Amy tries to get everything organized at Heartland before joining Ty on a work-related journey, but Tim's concerns about the trip threaten to derail Amy's plans. A threat from Ty's past.

TV reviews Last Updated On: I can honestly say that I was not expecting some of the twists that Heartland season 10 episode 13 brought us. But I am glad the show went where it went this episode because it was exciting to see and felt like something totally new. So without further ado, here is the recap of Heartland episode 13. And Heartland season 10 episode 13 was no exception. After Mallory arrived in Heartland, she spun a tall tale of having a fabulous life in London, but from her behavior, we could deduct, that it might not be true. She was a little too eager to get back to show jumping and for everything to be just the way it was when she left. And then, during a conversation between Mallory and Jack, we found out that her life in London is a mess and that she just wants to remember her old self. Which was also why she decided to come back to Heartland. In the end, Jack gave Mallory sage advice, telling her that although everything staying the same might seem nice and comfortable, it also is incredibly boring. And Mallory seemed to take it to heart, finally letting go of the tension inside of her. But just as everything seemed to fall in place for Mallory, Jake showed up at Heartland. I have a feeling that the next Heartland episode will also very much concentrate on Mallory and her finding herself again. Especially, since Jessica Amlee has only two episode story arc. But I think it will be more than enough for us to get our Mallory-fix and for the story to progress at just the right pace. Lou and Mitch In Heartland season 10 episode 13 we also saw two major couples of the show struggle with relationship problems. Firstly, we saw Lou, who was finally back from New York, and Mitch dancing around each other, trying to figure out their feelings and future. In a sweet scene at the beginning of the episode, Lou admitted to Amy that she had started texting with Mitch, while she was away, which would indicate that Lou and Mitch were finally on. He became distant again, and Lou was beating herself up about ruining yet another relationship by going too fast. But it turned out, that it had nothing to do with what Lou said. Mitch became like that because he had a huge decision to make, to accept or not to accept the new job in Calgary, which he applied for mainly because of Lou. This news about him possibly leaving, of course, devastated Lou, because for a moment she thought that their relationship was over without properly starting. In the review for episode 12 , I already mentioned how Adam assumed that there was something going on between Georgie and Clay. Neither Georgie or Adam seemed like they actually wanted this breakup, so we can hope that they will still work it out. Well, it seems, like the birth of the baby is getting closer and closer. And in Heartland season 10 episode 13, we saw another major step towards it. Lisa and Lou organized a baby shower for Amy. It was a sweet family gathering with food and gifts. Could this mean that Ty will be back in Heartland soon? I certainly hope so! That was probably the moment of Heartland season 10 episode 13 that took me most by surprise. Oh, what a sweet torture it is. You know me, classic case of foot in mouth syndrome. What did you let slip?

Here's a highlight reel from past seasons of Heartland. There have been so many special moments in the series and you can expect even more in season

Lisa and the rest of the family try to convince him to upgrade. However, he continues to complain about the truck, its seat settings, its lack of comfort, etc. He becomes upset, and takes the truck up to the fishing cabin. In the meantime, Amy is trying to help a horse named Duke, whose stable-mate died recently, by trying to get him to bond with Pegasus. When they find him, they ask Amy to solve his problem. Amy recognizes that the horse actually jumps fences without provocation, simply because he loves to jump. Kramer also helps Amy with Duke, because the two horses become fast friends. She is then able to get Duke to socialize with the other horses and to get over his grief. The end-of-school dance is also coming up fast, and Amy and Ty are supposed to go together. Instead, they wind up dancing in the bed of the truck, and Ty presents Amy with a promise ring. Ashley asks a rich boy from a private school to go with her as a date to the dance to make Caleb jealous. Caleb hitches his trailer to his truck, and tries to pull it away, but he and Ashley wind up laughing about it before she drives off with the other boy. Old Goldie the old truck is brought back to the farm as a "lawn ornament" and sits beside another old, dead truck. At first, Amy thinks it might be the feed, but Mr. Meanwhile, Badger returns to Heartland, having run away from his foster home to see his birth parents, but they had moved without leaving him any contact information. He talks to Ty about it, saying that he needs somewhere to stay overnight. Ty lets him stay temporarily, and Mallory finds Badger sketching by the lake. Both seem interested in each other, as Badger almost tells Mallory she looks more grown-up than before, and Mallory asks about Tara, who Badger seemed to be dating when they first showed up in Season 2. Mallory steals food for Badger, and the story returns to Amy. Soraya, Amy, Ashley, and Mallory recount the tale: One night, the barn erupted into flame and all the horses, as well as the young man, died in the fire. Now it is believed that The Drifter, the young man, haunts the barn, and he is portrayed as wearing a black cloak, with a hook for a hand, and no face under his hood. Amy and Ty go to the Hanley place, and spend several hours just playing cards. While they are there, Caleb, Soraya, and Ashley show up to scare them in which they succeed. Noises come from upstairs, which Amy had noticed earlier in the day. Amy and Ty investigate, despite Mr. They discover Mallory and Badger upstairs, and tell them to go home. At this point, Mr. Hanley appears and explains that the loft has dry rot, which is why he told Amy not to go upstairs. In the end, Amy discovers that Mr. He wants to force Mr. Hanley into foreclosure, so he can buy the land. She asks him about it, and they wind up kissing. Lou is planning on visiting Peter in Denver, Colorado, for a single day while he has a layover on his way back to Dubai. She gave him a jar of jam, and he returned the empty jar with a butterfly in it. Towards the end of the episode, Mrs. Bell brings a butterfly in a jar to the grave at the Hanley farm where he was buried, and releases it in his memory.

This Sunday, there will be an encore presentation of Heartland season 11, episode 17 at 6/NT on CBC Television! Here is the first look from when it originally aired back in March. Here is the first look from when it originally aired back in March.

Corn and soybeans are a few feet away from the shoulder. In the distance, you can see a water tower. This one is perfectly straight and smoothly paved. It leads towards the water tower through what seems like days of tall, bronze corn. Heartland is an intentional Christian community, designed after Psalm, where God leads the broken to a city of holiness. Since then, it has grown into a neighborhood and series of businesses for those who live there. The closest municipalities are Bethel, Mo. Heartland is a lot bigger. So what do people have to do in the middle of a cornfield? Well, a lot actually. Sharpe runs a construction company at Heartland, which builds all the houses for residents to live in. All of this is open to the public, and available for tours all year round. The cattle operation is one of the largest operations in Missouri and the creamery makes cheese sold across the United States. Hyvee and Schnucks carry the Heartland brand of eggs, milk, and cheese, fixed with the heartland water tower logo. Potts said her family was struggling to make ends meet. She heard about Heartland and came to visit with her husband and children. She said they felt at home at Heartland. She gives tours and her husband works on the cattle farm. Heartland Community Church follows a pretty straightforward branch of Evangelical Christianity. The church broadcasts sermons on local television stations, and sends young people around the world on mission trips every year. Some people hear about Heartland through their churches. Many are referred by friends who already live there or know Sharpe through his companies. Some people find Heartland by going on a tour. Potts said she gives tours to hundreds of people a year, many of them church groups, and the annual open house event attracts thousands over the Fourth of July. Many of them are young, and start their adult lives with the support of Heartland. Some important people in the region know about Heartland, too. In fact, people find Heartland from all over the United States, and then some of them send their children there. It has a K through 12 Christian curriculum and currently has more than students. The school backs up to the suburban style homes on the complex and looks out over a baseball field. Some students at HCA live at Heartland with their families, some come daily from nearby small towns, and others are boarders, dropped off by their parents for the "youth program" a rehabilitation track for "wayward teens. The youth program is not a new concept, especially in Missouri which is home to somewhere between 6 to 12 Christian youth programs and camps. As a teen, Sarah Barton said she was pretty out of control. She ran away, skipped school, slept in parks. But Heartland, she said, saved her. He is the answer to all things. He saved me, he restored my family. Plenty of other former students at Heartland said they felt the stability and structure put them on the right path. But while the strictness works for some, others say it crosses a line. Heartland Christian Academy openly uses corporal punishment. Leah Devost-Scribner lives in Alaska now with her husband and children. She was a student at Heartland between and when she was in her teens. Her parents sent her there from their home in New Hampshire, she said, to gain a closer relationship with Jesus. She said her parents had trouble with the adjustment and sent her to Heartland with her brothers in when she was 9 years old. She lived there for 7 years, and like Devost-Scribner, she said the punishments went too far. And it could be consisting of writing scripture, they believe in giving swats But Swanson and Devost-Scribner said they knew students at Heartland who were given the maximum ten swats everyday for weeks. Both recalled experiences with discipline at HCA that led to medical treatment. They went too far. She also received treatment for her injuries once back at home in Wisconsin. Boy and girl students are kept completely separate at HCA, only mingling in church, where they sit on opposite sides of the sanctuary. Devost-Scribner said she got in trouble for trying to pass a note to the boys, and was asked to bend over at the waist with her hands holding the edge of a chair and be swatted as punishment. When her parents discovered this, she said they took her out of Heartland. It dislocated, popped right out of place. Heartland openly uses a variety of techniques to keep children in line. Staff said it helps them spot children attempting to run away after getting in trouble. She also said they had signs that students had to wear which designated that they could not speak unless directed to by staff. The Missouri Department of Social Services lists isolation and spanking, as behaviors that could cross the boundary into abuse or neglect. It also includes emotional abuse in its definition of abuse. Swanson and Devost-Scribner say that while they were there, students were also isolated, denied meals, and verbally abused. Devost-Scribner said the years she spent at Heartland made a lasting impact. She said she remembered being desperate, and considered running away. While she never tried, she said her friends did. I would just remember them coming back and "from running through the corn, they would just be like completely like scraped up and just horrible. That they wanted to get out so bad that they would go through that much trouble of running through that. Sharpe, or Pastor Charlie as manly affectionately call him, is nothing if not charismatic. His golden skin makes his white teeth glow whiter, and his hair combed neatly shines with the same hue. And boy does he tell stories. Every question is answered with an anecdote in perfect pastor fashion. He brings his animates his own life story with characters good and bad. Heartland has gathered plenty over the years. We have zero tolerance. He said being strict is an important part of how Heartland runs. He tells a story that everyone at Heartland knows about driving along a country road and hearing the voice of God. I want you to build a place for kids. Those are the very people we want. He wears a shirt with his name stitched on the chest, and has a warm, open candor. Before Heartland, Wilson struggled with drugs and alcohol. He tried a number of different rehabilitation programs to deal with the meth, pain pills, and alcohol that he said had become his coping mechanisms. After relapsing, he said he felt hopeless. I slit my throat, stitches in my throat. It is a private, religious program that helps rehabilitate over men at a time who have issues ranging from alcohol and drug addiction to serious crimes and stints in prison. The program is 18 months long, longer than many rehab options, and the men live and work about 10 miles away from the main campus, technically in a different county. For Wilson, the intensity of the program helped keep him on track. Number two, it makes you live a year and a half sober. He stuck around Heartland after the program for the job security and was later joined by his family. Sharpe said that Heartland brings out the potential in people like Wilson, who society has deemed broken. Once we rebuild them, they really make great citizens, great people. All of our people have been in prison, or almost all of them. But some move into supervisory roles in the program, where they become responsible for leading others through recovery. Many of the men in the program have committed serious crimes" sometimes as serious as sex offenses "and then stick around Heartland and the vulnerable population it serves. But Sharpe and those who run the recovery program say that growing to the point of being able to help others shows real change of character. Wilson agreed and said he appreciated the chance to share his story with others battling the same demons. We are let down occasionally. Matt Franck, deputy metro editor for the St. He said that having the men from the recovery program continue to live at Heartland and in some cases interact with students is likely to lead to problem. Frankly, he said, what the state is doing to help troubled youth and people who need rehabilitation is not working. Publications from People Magazine to online bloggers have given Heartland less than glowing reviews. There was a period of time when he and Heartland were getting a lot of attention from the state. The State of Missouri In the late s, a few things about Heartland started stacking up in state offices.
